LULU: "Oh, Charley, look at those lovely violets. I must pick some."
CHARLEY: "We can't land there, Lulu. I see no way of getting you ashore unless I carry you."

THE DEATH ON THE CROSS

THE SOLEMN ASSEMBLAGE AT THE CRUCIFIXION.

The Shocking Human Sacrifice of One of the "Penitentes" in Colorado at Their Good Friday Religious Ceremonial

Torres, Colorado, June 10.

ON "Calvary Hill," near here in Las Animas County, an accident happened on Good Friday. A young man named Jesus Gonzales was nailed to a cross during the Easter religious ceremonials of the Penitentes, and expired in view of the awe-struck spectators. He had volunteered to take the part of the Saviour in the solemn ritual of the sect, and his wrists and ankles had been firmly bound to the cross with ropes. At his own request nails were then driven through his hands and he was spiked to the cross-beam of the cross. At a signal from the high priest of the Penitentes the cross was elevated and the ceremonial continued.

Following literally the New Testament narrative of the Saviour's crucifixion, every incident and episode was imitated. Some of the Penitential Brothers performed the part of Roman soldiers, and one of them pressed a sponge of vinegar to the lips of Gonzales. The pseudo Christ smiled feebly and whispered the Saviour's last words, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do." The Penitentes then divided Gonzales's clothes and cast lots for them, as told in the Scriptural account. A brother then seized a spear and plunged it into Gonzales's side, and his face lighted up with the beatific smile of a martyr.

Meanwhile the various episodes of the crucifixion were executed with solemn zeal, while the victim hung weak and

Unhappiest Little Wanderers in the World

Kidnapped from Their Rich Father by Their Mother After the Quarrel and Separation That Filled Them with Terror, Hurried Secretly from Place to Place, No Home but Hotels and Boarding Houses, Yet with a Fortune Awaiting Them, They Are Still Wanderers.

The Schaefer Children Before Their Troubles Began.

General Emil Schaefer.

Mrs. Schaefer and Broker Gorham A. Worth at Deer Lodge, in the Green Mountains.

PROBABLY the most unhappy, while certainly the most travelled and experienced, children in the United States are little Eleanor and Freda Schaefer, the six and eight year old daughters of the late millionaire, General Emil Schaefer. For more than two years these children, heiresses born with a golden spoon in their mouths, have been literally wanderers on the face of the earth.

Despite the fact that their father was a man of wealth and high social standing, having been on the staff of the Governor of New York during the administration of David B. Hill, the two little girls have led the lives of gypsies and fugitives.

Twice they have been kidnapped by their mother.

Once in a court of justice they have heard their father say bitter things of their mother and have heard their mother make harsh charges against their father. One of them, Freda, the youngest, had hysteria in court. They have been snatched from their beds at midnight, and driven across the country in blizzards or thunder storms to catch a train at some obscure station.

For all of those two years and four months they have lived at hotels and boarding houses. Once, while they were dining in one of these hotels, they saw their mother grow pale and stare at a window with frightened eyes. They, too, saw that which had alarmed her—the faces of two men, watching them grimly out of the darkness—and they knew without being told that they must move on again; knew it as well as though a cross policeman in the park had told them so. And move they were sure to do, sometimes within the half hour, always in some secret way, by the side or back, or even the cellar door, often in closed carriages, and frequently without their trunks.

Had No Little Playmates.

Once a Judge asked them whether they loved their mother, and with whom they would rather live—their father or mother—and the children hesitated, burst into tears, and at last went to their mother.

They have heard threats of shooting and murder, and once they saw their distracted mother flourish a revolver in the face of one of the detectives who had been following them.

They have not for those two years and more been permitted to make one friend, nor even acquaintance. They have not been allowed to play with any other children, not even to speak to them, no matter how clean, or sweet, or amiable those little ones might be.

In their old home, before these sad two years began, little Miss Freda and little Miss Eleanor each had a nurse, and there was also a governess who taught them German and English and French and who had also begun to give them music lessons. But all this was before that dreadful night when papa and mamma had quarrelled and she had run away and they had lain awake and cried all night. To Freda and Eleanor everything had happened before or after "that night." It marked the dividing line in their little lives, the calendar of the sorrows of the Schaefer children.

Since that time there had been no nurse, no governess. There had been very few lessons, for their mother was too troubled, too anxious, to teach them herself, and she had said to them:

"You cannot have a nurse or governess now, because they might steal you and take you back to your papa."

The sorrows of the Schaefer children began, as the troubles of most children begin, with differences between their parents. It was all so different from what the friends who attended the wedding of pretty Aurelia Runk to General Emil Schaefer had expected. True, there was a disparity in their ages. She was nineteen and he was forty, but they had no doubt of their future happiness, and their confidence begot the same confidence in their guests.

European Honeymoon.

Miss Runk was the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Runk, who at the time of the marriage lived in handsome apartments at the Carnegie Hotel, New York. General Schaefer had been a member of the Eleventh Regiment, and while David B. Hill was Governor had held the office of Brigadier-General. He was president of the F. & M. Schaefer Brewing Company, and society paragraphs had referred to him as "the millionaire brewer bachelor."

General Schaefer took his bride to Europe for their honeymoon. When they returned he fitted up lavishly their home, at No. 53 East Ninety-third street. But, after a few months, rumors of a lack of harmony in the household reached the friends who had been guests at the wedding. They deplored it. They never quite understood it. And they said:

"Perhaps, after all, May and December."

After a while they took the friends somewhat into their confidence. Mrs. Schaefer intimated that her husband had a violent temper. General Schaefer alleged that Mrs. Schaefer cared overmuch for the admiration her beauty evoked, and that she had tastes as extravagant as those of the princess who amused herself by dissolving pearls in vinegar.

Quarrel and Make Up.

Mrs. Schaefer made long visits to her mother and to other relatives and friends, but these absences were followed by reconciliations with her husband that were at least temporary. But they were only temporary.

The little maids, Freda and Eleanor, slept upon sheets that were like gossamer, under coverlets of softest pink and blue silk, and the canopies over their little beds in the nursery were of lace as sheer as cobwebs or the tracings of Jack Frost's fingers. They had all the toys of all the lands, and yet for some intangible, unanalyzable reason they were not as happy as Mrs. O'Flaherty's seven on the same street, but four blocks nearer East River. Mrs. O'Flaherty is a laundress, and her husband is a longshoreman, but what they lacked in riches they made up in good cheer, and the dearth of silk was not missed, because of the abundance of sunny temper.

One night came the dreadful quarrel which the Schaefer children heard afar off in terror. They heard angry words, they heard their mother say in a high voice, "Then good-by forever," and the outer door closed.

They Saw Their Mamma in a Carriage.

It was two weeks afterward that the adventures of Freda and Eleanor began. They were driving with Freda's nurse in Mount Morris Park one morning when Eleanor cried out with delight: "There's mamma!"

Mrs. Schaefer was in a carriage with a tall man whom the children knew well. He had often called at their home.

"Oh, Mr. Worth!" they cried.

The man helped their mother from the carriage, and she came over and talked earnestly with the nurse.

"Why, yes, ma'am, if you think the General wont be angry. I——"

"Not at all, I assure you," Mrs. Schaefer had answered sweetly, and in a moment the little girls had been lifted into the carriage, the tall man had driven them rapidly to another part of the city, one they had never seen, the hotel district, and these little maids from the mansion were having their first view of the "big houses where such lots of people live."

Very shortly afterward they were in another carriage, a closed one, and were taken to a big crowded building, where they were hurried through iron gates and upon a train. Their mother, they noticed, looked over her shoulder anxiously, and when the train had started she sank back in the green velvet chair and sighed:

"At last! Oh, I was so afraid they might find us!"

"Do you mean papa and uncle?" asked Eleanor, but her mother put her finger on her lips and the children learned their first lesson in the silence that they have observed in all their wanderings, a silence so profound that curious persons, seeing them day after day, have said:

"Do you suppose those children cannot talk?"

And others would answer: "I have never heard a sound from them. Perhaps they are mutes."

The children formed another habit. They grew to look apprehensively over their shoulders, and to start at the sound of a sudden step. The little daughters of Emil Schaefer had taken on the tricks of the fugitive.

It was on February 11, 1903, that their mother had met them in Mount Morris Park and taken them for a drive. From February 12 to 24 they had travelled to Philadelphia and back to New York, across New Jersey, through Pennsylvania, back to Connecticut, to Massachusetts and back to Connecticut.

On February 25 they fled with their mother from Greenwich, Conn., after they had seen two men looking in the window. It was a long drive after midnight, and Freda cried and said, "I want to go back to Papa." But her mother said, "Hush!" and placed her hand over her mouth to stifle the homesick sobs and words. On February 26 they took a train at Stamford, got off at New Haven and went to another hotel. Shortly after this they were walking along the streets of Morristown, N. J., when the strange step they dreaded sounded behind them. A man laid his hand on their mother's shoulder and said: "Now, Mrs. Schaefer, I've got you."

Their mother snatched a pistol from her pocket and waved it in the man's face, but he took it from her. They had never seen her so angry before. Her face was pale, then crimson, and she trembled as though she would fall.

"I would have killed you," she said in a strange voice. "I had the right under the law."

The man was a detective. They were carried again in a closed carriage to a courtroom and an old Judge said he was sorry for them.

"A hotel is no place for a child," he said as though he were scolding.

They saw their father, looking very ill—they heard he had been ill ever since they went away with their mother that day in Mount Morris Park—and the Judge asked each of them whom they loved more, their father or mother—and they looked from one to the other and at last said, "Mamma."

"And with whom would you rather live?" the Judge said.

"With mamma," they answered, and Freda, seeing how sad her father looked, went into convulsions just as court closed.

The children were placed in the custody of their mother's lawyer on parole, but the day before they were to be turned over to the court for final disposition, their mother slipped out of the attorney's office with them, and there was another rapid drive in a closed carriage, another breathless boarding of a train, and then the children went to Baltimore and lived in another hotel for a few days.

"Don't tell any one your names, or mamma will be very angry," adjured Mrs. Schaefer.

In a "Haunted House."

Then they went to Canada, and thereafter no one will admit that he has seen them.

Whither have the wanderings of the unhappy Schaefer children led them?

Their mother's companion, Gorham Worth, once a broker on lower Broadway, owns an old family mansion at Sparkhill, N. Y. It has long been deserted, and there is a rumor in the neighborhood that the old house is haunted. Lights have been seen, voices heard there often within the past two years. The agent of the property says there is evidence that persons have come and gone in the old house without his knowledge.

"No one has a key to the premises but myself and Mr. Worth," he says.

Has the hiding place of bats and owls been theirs?

Gorham Worth's wife secured a divorce. General Schaefer secured a divorce. Two months ago the General died.

Mrs. Schaefer has been cut off with a dollar. The General's will, it is said, contains some hard words about recreant wives, but it leaves all of his wealth to his two little daughters. The will has not yet been probated. The executors of the estate are searching for the two little heiresses. They have not, they say, the slightest clew. They are nearly hopeless.

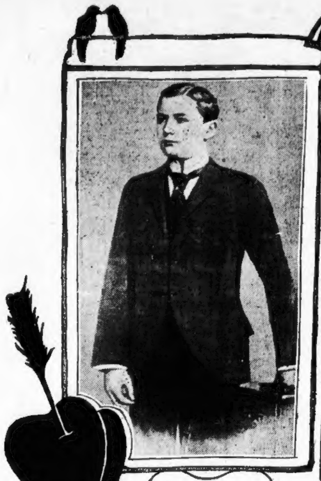
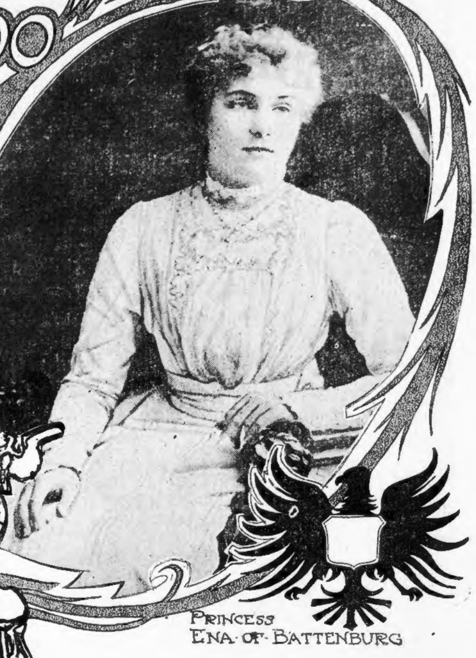
"Please, Papa, Let ME get Married, too"

Little Boys Don't Marry, Says the Kaiser to Prince Eitel, His Favorite Second Son, Who Is Desperately in Love With Princess Ena, of Battenberg, His Cousin.



PRINCE EITEL FRITZ



PRINCESS ENA OF BATTENBURG

Princess Ruprecht of Bavaria. Crown Prince Frederick William. Duchess Carl Theodore of Bavaria. Prince Eitel Fritz. Princess Albert of Belgium.

EVERYBODY knows that the Kaiser breathed a sigh of relief on the day the Crown Prince was safely married to the little Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin.

The bride's irrepressible mamma had been disposed of, the Crown Prince's string of actresses and chorus girls were nightmares of the past.

Ach-nun—so all was well. "No more matrimonial complications for the present," said the good Berliners. The Kaiser settled back to domestic quiet, when suddenly the news that Prince Eitel Fritz, good Prince Eitel, the Kaiser's favorite son, the most promising of his entire family, had fallen in love was bruited abroad.

They say the Kaiser himself is amazed. He didn't dream of it—yet. Prince Eitel is so young and she—well, the trouble is that no one in the whole Kingdom—not even the Kaiser himself—can possibly find any objection to her.

Prince Eitel has fallen in love with one of the prettiest and best behaved of royal princesses—the Princess Ena they call her for short. But when the formal announcement of her engagement is made she will be presented to the people of Germany as the Princess Victoria Eugenie Julia Ena of Battenberg.

She is very young, barely eighteen. And he is very young—just twenty-two.

According to common report the Kaiser would have liked his son to devote himself to—well to him for a year or so, and now he is head over ears devoted to some one else. The Kaiser doesn't like it a bit, and yet there is absolutely nothing to find fault with.

In his interview with his son, when the boy proudly confessed with whom he had fallen in love, the Kaiser, they say, raised vague objections in which he talked about youth—

"But," cried the boy, "I am only a year younger than my brother."

"A year—a year—" murmured the Kaiser.

"He was engaged at my age," protested the boy. "And there is nothing against her!"

Alas no—that was the trouble. It was just that the Kaiser was in this instance the father only. He wanted his boy Eitel, his favorite son, at home for awhile—his and his alone.

Possibly the only other royal personage who will completely sympathize with him is Beatrice, Princess of Battenberg, whose only daughter is the Princess Ena.

A Boy and Girl Love Affair.

But Prince Eitel is in love, and by every evidence so is the little Princess. Of course like any other tender hearted young persons they are very sorry indeed to grieve their loving parents, but surely they must be expected to marry. Eighteen and twenty-two seem the most admirable sort of a combination.

The very youth of the Princess Ena should please the Emperor. A girl of eighteen is so very easy to mould, though in her case it is fair to suppose that her moulding has been of the very best, as good even as though she were the Kaiser's very own daughter. It must be remembered that she comes of the very excellent family from which the Only William's father chose a bride. She is, by the way, his own cousin, second cousin to Prince Eitel and daughter of the youngest sister of the King of England and of the Emperor's mother.

Rather closely related, you may say. But a little thing like consanguinity rouses no more objection than extreme youth when one is royal. One's own family one can't have any doubt about, for better or worse—that's the way kings and queens look at the intermarriages of cousins.

There isn't a doubt that Princess Ena has been admirably brought up. The late Queen Victoria herself until her death superintended her education. Now, as the late Queen brought up the Kaiser's own mother, he naturally has respect for the sort of girl Ena must be. He has also some respect for the judgment of his son Eitel, who is as different from the Crown Prince as though he belonged to another family. He has never given his father the slightest trouble in the world, except when he had an attack of pneumonia a few months ago. Up to that time he was the most stalwart of the family, standing a full head taller than his brother, the Crown Prince, who has sowed his wild oats all over the empire of Germany.

Prince Eitel never appeared to have had any to sow. His life reads like that of a model schoolboy. There are no hairbreadth escapes out of back doors of theatres, no threatened elopements with mere Americans, no falling in love with ballet girls, nothing but apparent submission to the Emperor's will.

And in return the Emperor has always relied upon him and pointed to him as a model of excellence.

Prince Eitel and the little Ena first met some four years ago, when the Kaiser went to England on a visit accompanied by his two eldest boys. Ena was fourteen, but very tall for her age, and not in the least like any royal girl that Eitel had ever seen, for she was beautiful. Tall, golden-haired, blue-eyed—a typical English girl, and not a bit royal. At that time the Crown Prince saw her too. His judgment in girls was considered by Eitel to be most admirable, and he consulted with him about the charms of Ena.

He discovered, so the story goes, that the Crown Prince himself was on the verge of being infatuated by the little lady. And, what is moire to the point, the Kaiser discovered it, too.

Prince Eitel was meanwhile too young to be considered in the least seriously. He might pay court to the little Ena all he pleased. The Kaiser smiled as he would upon the game of any pretty children. Ena was charming, well brought up, and of his own family, as it were.

The little girl's mother was pleased, too. Young Prince Eitel was so very handsome and so very gentlemanly—the kind of wellbred boy that any mother would be glad to see her daughter about with.

The little Princess Ena was pleased for very much the same reasons as her mother, though, of course, she didn't analyze them. She only knew she liked the handsome, sturdy young fellow who came down to visit her at Osborne House in the Isle of Wight, where her mother holds the official position of Governor.

As for Prince Eitel, he has since declared that he never had a better time in his life. So none of that small quartet were disturbed by any qualms about what the future might bring forth. Prince Eitel alone may have had his suspicions, but he confided them to no one; they merely made him extremely happy.

For four years he treasured them. And now, after his brother has been disposed of as satisfactorily as could be expected, he has ventured to suggest to the Kaiser that he too has a heart, or rather had one until it flew out of his keeping into that of Ena of Battenberg.

The golden-haired Ena, as if by a preconcerted arrangement, has ventured to suggest something quite similar to her mamma.

And the Princess Beatrice, according to every report, has cried out with the Kaiser, "My dear child, you are too young!"

To every one else in the royal circle the match seems most excellent and proper. King Edward is delighted at the idea of it. There aren't any too many princes of the blood, and this one is admirable in every respect. What then is the matter with Ena's mother?

Try as she may, there isn't an objection that she can put forward to the young Prince himself.

She and the Kaiser are in the same position. Frequently the Kaiser has said, "It is better that a woman should know how to bake a pancake than that she should be able to discuss constitutional questions."

There seemed in the end only one possible objection to bring forward, and that a strange one, and yet impossible to overcome. The ex-Empress Eugenie has always been a devoted friend of the Princess Beatrice, and Ena's godmother. Little Ena has always loved her, and the Empress has declared over and over that the girl shall be her heiress. But now? A German Prince. Impossible. All may be forgotten and forgiven, but even an ex-Empress of the French can never leave her property to a German Princess.

"How about your godmother?" she asked. "You know how she loves you."

"I can't please every one," cried Ena; "it is impossible. Isn't it enough that I am in love? We are in love, mamma"——

What could the Princess Beatrice say? She murmured "Wait."

Wait. What for? These two young people can't possibly understand why they should wait. Some day they may, but that day is many years off. It wont come till they themselves have marriageable daughters and sons.

The Amazing Mystery of Martin Meeker

"He Is Dead and We Have Buried Him," Declare the Heirs of the Millionaire Banker. "But the Man You Buried Was NOT Martin Meeker," Replies the Young Hospital Nurse He Was Engaged to Wed.

Frankfort, Ind., June 14.

"WHERE are you hiding Martin Meeker, my promised husband?" demands pretty Miss Maggie Heck, trained nurse and proprietress of a flourishing sanitarium at Greenwood, Ind.

"We are not hiding him," declares the family of the Minnesota millionaire banker and travelling salesman. "He is dead, and we have buried him beside the body of his wife at Batavia, Ill."

"The man you buried," protests Miss Heck, "had a long beard and a thick head of hair, and the Coroner said he had been an habitual drunkard. Martin Meeker, my betrothed husband, was clean shaven except for his mustache, and was slightly bald. You should know this, and also that he never touched liquor in any form."

"Martin Meeker is dead. We, two sons and two daughters, are his heirs. We demand that you turn over to us the Sanitarium purchased with his money and which you falsely lay claim to."

"I shall have no dealings with you while I still have reason to believe that my intended husband is alive, and that you are depriving him of his liberty," says Miss Heck.

The Strange Story

It is one of the strangest of all strange stories of real life—which is so often stranger than fiction. Although sixty years old and a millionaire, his property including large interests in several banks at Farmington, Minn., Martin Meeker had never retired from his occupation as a travelling salesman. He had been for years in the employ of a Minnesota flouring mill company, selling its product to retail dealers in Indiana, Ohio and Michigan. He made his headquarters in Cleveland, O., where he had large property interests.

Martin Meeker.

Four years ago, while he was on one of his trips, he was taken violently ill at Elwood, Ind. As he required the attention of a trained nurse, the attending physician recommended Miss Maggie Heck, or her sister, Lora, who were in Elwood at that time. Miss Maggie Heck was engaged. She was an attractive young woman and a thoroughly experienced nurse. Mr. Meeker was confined to his bed for a long time. A friendship grew up between patient and nurse that was to ripen into love.

Miss Lora Heck, calling upon her sister, also met Mr. Meeker, and after his recovery he continued to tarry in Elwood. He became infatuated with Miss Maggie and suggested that inasmuch as she and her sister were professional nurses they should purchase a sanitarium in some desirable locality. They said that they had saved only $1,000 each, and were not able to make the purchase.

"I have plenty of money," said Mr. Meeker. "Let me know when you have found a place where you think you will succeed."

The two sisters visited a number of places in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, and upon their return to Elwood reported that they had found nothing suitable that was for sale. Mr. Meeker then suggested that he and Maggie make a trip together. At Greenwood, Ind., they at last found a sanitarium which could be bought for $6,000. Mr. Meeker was much attracted by the place and insisted that the sisters could purchase it. They consented and Mr. Meeker furnished the money necessary after the sisters had put in the $2,000 they had saved.

The Heck Sanitarium, at Greenwood, Ind.

Miss Maggie Heck, Who Refuses to Believe Her Fiance Is Dead.

The deed Mr. Meeker had made out to the sisters jointly, saying that he intended them to have the property, and all he wanted was a place to stop at and be cared for. The sisters insisted that the deed be made to the three of them jointly, but Mr. Meeker would not hear to this, saying that he had plenty of money and had provided well for his children; if he wanted to make them a present of the sanitarium it was nobody's business.

After the purchase the place was fitted up and was conducted by the Heck sisters until the Spring of 1904, at which time Lora went away, leaving the place in charge of Maggie. Mr. Meeker visited the sanitarium quite often, sometimes remaining ten days or two weeks. At length he announced that he and Miss Maggie were engaged to be married and that the ceremony would occur in April, 1904. In December, 1903, she suggested that he should let his children know of their engagement, and during the holidays he took her to Cleveland, and while there informed her that he had told his children of their engagement and that two of them made serious objections.

She did not meet his children, stopping instead at a hotel. She returned to Greenwood and in January Mr. Meeker arrived at the sanitarium from Louisville, Ky., where he said he had been held up and robbed. His face was cut and bruised. He remained at the sanitarium for several weeks, being cared for by Miss Heck. When he left he said he was going to Cleveland.

Miss Heck received a letter every day from Mr. Meeker from the time she first met him, and continuing for over a year. On February 8, 1904, she received a letter from him at Cleveland in which he had enclosed a check for $100. There was no letter the next day nor the next, and upon the third day Miss Heck telegraphed to Cleveland to learn what the trouble was. The next day she received a telegram asking if Mr. Meeker was at Greenwood.

In December, 1904, two sons of Martin Meeker—G. N. Meeker, of Owensboro, Ky., and Merle Meeker, of Farmington, Minn.—arrived at Indianapolis, where they employed a firm of lawyers, who at once requested Maggie Heck to call upon them at their office.

This she did, and while there the two sons informed her that they believed their father was dead. Miss Heck was accompanied by an Indianapolis attorney, and when the attorneys for the Meeker sons suggested to her that she make a trust deed for the sanitarium to be in force for five years or until the presumption of death should have been removed, she to have the rents and profits during this time, her attorney advised her to do so.

It was at this time that Attorney Asa H. Boulden, of this city, appeared upon the scene. Being in ill-health he went to the Greenwood Sanitarium for a short stay, and while there he noted that Miss Heck appeared to be worried about something. He informed her that he was an attorney, and that if there was anything that he could do for her he would gladly advise her. Miss Heck thereupon told him her whole story, and brought witnesses to prove the truth of her assertions.

On April 12 Miss Heck received a clipping from a Cleveland paper, which stated that Martin Meeker had been found dead in a lumber yard in that city on April 10. When Mr. Meeker left the sanitarium for Cleveland he wore several valuable diamonds, a Masonic watch charm and a gold ring with a Masonic emblem upon it. He was well dressed, smooth shaven with the exception of a mustache, and was neat and tidy in appearance. He was a man about sixty years of age. He was slightly bald.

As soon as this word was received Attorney Boulden left for Cleveland to make an investigation. He found that the body had been shipped to Batavia, Ill., for burial beside the wife of Martin Meeker. From the Coroner, detectives that were engaged on the case, and from the undertaker, Mr. Boulden learned that the body of the man found in the lumber yard was dirty, emaciated and covered with vermin. The corpse had a heavy head of curly hair and a beard that reached half way to the waist. In the pocket was found part of a Baltimore & Ohio Railway mileage book, unsigned, and a small book in which was written in a very poor hand the name, Martin Meeker, and further that he had a son at Owensboro, Ky., and another at Farmington, Minn., and in case of accident to notify them.

Body Hastily Buried.

The two had been notified by the Coroner and went on to Cleveland, G. N. Meeker arriving in the morning and Merle Meeker in the afternoon. The body of the man found in the lumber yard said to be their father was still at the morgue. They did not go near the morgue, but gave orders that the body be removed to an undertaker's establishment where it was embalmed and placed in a costly casket. Before the body was finally prepared for burial the sons gave orders that the long beard should be trimmed as closely as possible. This was done, and then the body was shipped to Illinois, where it was buried on April 14.

It was also claimed at Cleveland that the man found dead there gave evidence of having been a hard drinker, while Martin Meeker was never known to touch intoxicants in any form. There were other circumstances tending to show that another body had been substituted and buried as that of Mr. Meeker. Before leaving Cleveland, Attorney Boulden employed a detective to continue the hunt for Meeker, or evidence showing that he was still alive.

Miss Maggie Heck refuses to believe that her intended husband is dead, and has refused all offers made by the sons of Martin Meeker to give up the sanitarium, a piece of property estimated to be worth now from $12,000 to $15,000.

Attorney Boulden is making a careful search of the sanitariums in this and neighboring States, being confident that Martin Meeker is being held a prisoner in some such institution.

Miss Maggie Heck says she will remain true to Martin Meeker. She is confident that he will yet return to her and carry out his promise to make her his wife.

Dainty Paris Novelties You Can Easily Make at Home.

PARIS is responsible for more fads in the way of dress than one can relate, but surely no city ever produced such daintily feminine, fascinating and alluring furbelows and frills as come over from that centre of things lovely to look upon.

Paris has decreed that the well dressed woman must wear, fastened to her lingerie or her corset, some one of the several pretty articles of fine lawn and filmy lace; wide, soft ribbon and coquettish little bows, as appear in the illustrations on this page. Practically all Parisiennes wear corsets—and insist upon the best as being necessary to the grace of the figure and the stylish set of the gown—so all the many charming additions to one's upper underwear are really intended to fasten to the corset, but the "common sense" dressers in Germany, England and America, who disdain stiff waist envelopments and wear patented underwear that has little regard for a woman's waist measurements, manage to fasten the pretty Parisian fancies to their lingerie and wear them without a qualm since they adorn without restriction.

One of the simplest decorations consists of two of the largest sizes of lace-bordered handkerchiefs—such as may be had at 25 cents each—cut across one side. The shorter side is gathered upon the cut edge and sewed to the same narrow tape or band over the gathered edge of the longer side. Sewing each piece separately makes the ruffling fuller and prevents a disposition to tear in the laundry; a beading is sewed over the band, and through this is run baby ribbon. To the upper edge of the beading is gathered a full frill of fine lace. At the corners and in the centre may be placed bows of any sort of ribbon desired, but the corner bows must be rather flat, while the centre ones should be full.

The most popular of the decorations is the padded bow. To make this, measure a piece of ribbon across the bust, from arm to arm, not including the shoulders, and fold the ribbon over on one end and cut it off where it meets the other. Sew up the open end and one side with fine sewing silk of the tint of the ribbon, so that the stitches will not show, and then lay inside the two pieces of ribbon a very thick wadding of cotton batting. Great rolls of cotton batting may be purchased for thirteen cents each. The cotton unrolls in layers, and four layers, a little narrower than the ribbon, are sufficient, as a rule. The ribbon should not be narrower than one's hand, and wider widths are preferred. After the cotton is neatly laid in the ribbon sew up the other side. Take a yard or a little less of wide ribbon and tie it tightly around the middle of the wadded piece, and then make a large bow over the knot.

The padded bows are usually made of very wide pink or pale blue or pale yellow or white satin, and they are decorated with embroidery and hand painting, in small floral designs, or are made of flowered ribbon or polka-dotted silk.

Ruches, as decorations for lingerie, are extremely popular, and are made of a variety of materials. The woman of plethoric purse and exclusive tastes has hers made of exquisite real lace or the finest of fine embroideries, with tiny lace edges.

Sometimes less expensive laces are used for full ruffles and sometimes quite cheap embroideries. In any case a band is measured from arm to arm, across the front of the corset, and to this is sewed the ruffles and quillings till they literally stand out. According to the fullness desired one uses from two to five yards of ruffling along the band, putting it on with the gathered edges to the centre of the band and on its edges, one ruffle overlapping the other. The work is very easy. Where wide ribbon is employed very full box pleats are sewed along the middle as close as they can be put on the band and with the edges open and standing out. Little silk ruffles, with edges of taffeta ruching, pinked on the edge, are also sewed to a band, but this sort of decoration is too bouffant for most people to wear.

Shadowed for 50 Years, And Then Slain

The Remarkable Details of an Inherited Feud, in Which Rich Mr. Dames Was Relentlessly Tracked for Half a Century Before His Mysterious Enemy Finally Cornered Him in a Broken Down Hut and Took His Life.

"I HAVE an enemy. He has been like my shadow for years. Some morning they will find me dead—murdered."

These words of old Frederick Lother Dames, veteran of the civil war, a wanderer since early youth, yet at different times a mysteriously prosperous citizen of half a dozen States—these words furnish the only light upon the mystery of his brutal murder ten days ago in Bellingham, Washington.

The old German's grewsome prediction was verified—one morning he was found dead in the cabin where he lived his solitary life, with the hatchet wielded by the murderer still sticking in his skull.

It was known that the old man kept only a small sum of money by him. This—amounting to not quite $30—was found in his wallet, which had not been touched, apparently, by the murderer. But over the floor of the cabin were scattered burnt matches and other evidences that every nook and corner had been searched.

What was the meaning of this search, which ignored the money in the old man's pocket? Did the murderer find, or did he not find, some document or other article which might explain the long-standing feud, the wanderings of half a century, the final murder? All efforts as yet to find the answer to that question have been fruitless.

Two Mysterious Suspects.

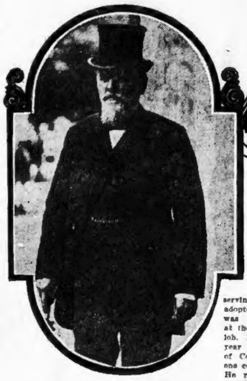
Two men, calling themselves Charles Davis and William Donnelly, have been arrested, charged with the crime. They do not talk, and a perplexing air of mystery surrounds them. Their arrival in Bellingham a month ago was mysterious. They occupied an abandoned shack in the outskirts of the town and seemed little above the station of common tramps.

The murdered man had told of kicking Donnelly out of his cabin a few days before. He seemed to know who the men were, but made a mystery of his knowledge, merely saying that they were "no good."

In the bunk of Davis, in the shack occupied by the two men, was found a pair of miner's overalls, recently washed, which bore stains of human blood. No document or other article was found connecting the men in any way with Frederick Lother Dames.

It is from Milwaukee, Wis., that all the light there is upon the mystery surrounding the life of this old wanderer comes. This light indicates that if Davis and Donnelly are the murderers, the feud, on their part, is inherited, as both of them are of a younger generation than their victim.

Is one of them the son of the man whose real or fancied wrongs of half a century ago started Frederick Lother Dames on his long wanderings?



F. L. Dames, Who Was Mysteriously Murdered.

What was the nature of those wrongs can only be surmised. Several features of the history of the wanderer appear significant. When a young man his whole nature suddenly changed. From a happy, rollicking German boy, almost in a night he became a grave and taciturn man, and his wanderings began. Although of a family whose men married young and raised large families, he shunned all women save his mother and his favorite younger sister. To them he wrote from many States of his prosperity, principally as a miner in Utah, Montana, California and Idaho, and sent them money.

But no sooner had he become prosperous in one State than he would move on to another place, for no reason that he ever explained.

The Dames family came from Germany and settled in Milwaukee fifty years ago. The father conducted a prosperous butcher business. It was shortly before the breaking out of the Civil War that the son Frederick's character became so suddenly and mysteriously transformed. He was then only seventeen years old. He left home without apparent cause, and was presently heard from in Iowa. There he enlisted in Company A of the Sixteenth Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

His letters home showed that he was always at the front. There were hints that he sought to lose his life while serving well his adopted country. He was taken prisoner at the battle of Shiloh. But not even a year of the horrors of Confederate prisons could kill him. He returned to his family a bronzed and rugged veteran, and extremely taciturn.

He had money and spent it freely, being especially lavish of presents to his little sister Fredericka, upon whom he seemed to pour out all the affection of his reserved disposition.

But he did not long remain at home. The spirit of wandering was strong within him, and soon he drifted away. Then began the years of wanderings which took him over a large portion of the West, from city to city, from State to State. At long intervals a letter would come from him—brief, laconic, entirely typical of the writer. At still longer intervals he made visits home, but was always ill at ease there and anxious to be gone again.

On these rare visits home he took his sister into his confidence more than he did any other person, and although long years have passed little Fredericka, now a grandmother, remembers "Brother Fred's" boasts of his money, his mining ventures, his stock ranch in Idaho, his real estate investments in other places. But they were quiet, modest boasts, and withal conveyed a minimum amount of detailed information.

The Tumble-Down Cabin in Which Mr. Dames's Body Was Found.

He always had money, and when his only brother died in Chicago, unmarried, it was Frederick Dames who accompanied his father to that city and the son's money that purchased a cemetery lot there.

When the father died the widow was reminded once more of her son's thrift and thoughtfulness by receiving a little package with $100 in gold in it, "for funeral expenses." These letters came from Iowa, from Louisiana, from Texas, from Colorado, from Idaho, from California, from Utah. But after his father's death the wanderer became more and more careless in his correspondence.

Finally, in the Spring of 1884, his last letter was received, from Los Angeles, Cal., telling that he might go into business there. That was the last word, the last trace of the wandering one which his aged mother and sister, Mrs. Frederick Wellhausen, in Milwaukee, received for almost nineteen years, until they got a letter from H. Frankenberg, formerly a Milwaukee man, but now a resident of Bellingham, informing them of the murder.

Since then they have learned that Dames had a meat market in Long Beach, Cal., for about ten years, that he went then to Portland, Ore., where he remained two years, going to Bellingham about four years ago.

In Bellingham he purchased a lot and erected a meat market on Elk street, with a shack on the rear of the lot, divided into two portions, one of which he occupied himself for sleeping quarters and the other he devoted to his pigeons and rabbits, of which he kept large numbers.

Mrs. Frederick Wellhausen.

Before going to California it is also known that Dames was in the cattle business in Idaho, that he was in Montana, that he had a meat market in Salt Lake City, Utah, and that he was in Colorado for some time.

Dames took his meals at a restaurant. On the morning following the murder he did not appear at his usual time, and that led to an investigation. Two friends, summoned by a frightened boy who worked at the butcher shop, found the body of Dames lying on the floor of his sleeping room, covered with a blanket.

On uncovering it, they were horrified to see that it had been hacked and gashed with a hatchet, which still remained imbedded in the dead man's skull. There were other wounds, also, inflicted apparently with a chisel, and that also protruded from a gaping hole in the skull, where it had been thrust before the murderer's thirst for blood was satiated.

Matches in bunches were scattered around, showing that the murderer had been searching for something for some time. The money in his wallet had not been touched.

What were the murderers hunting for in the shack? What did they find? Why did they mutilate the body after life was extinct?

The last man to see Dames alive was Robert A. McDonald, who came to Bellingham about the first of March. He walked with him along the street on that fateful evening to a point near the meat market, and then left him about 9:13 o'clock.

McDonald came from Missoula, Mont., where he was acquainted with Dan Hefferon, Sr., who was a business partner of Dames in Salt Lake City many years before. It was through Hefferon's recommendation that McDonald met Dames and became acquainted with him. In the few weeks McDonald had been there, he and Dames had become quite intimate, but not enough so to cause the elder man to dispel the mystery of his wanderings beyond that one remark:

"I have an enemy. He has been like my shadow for years. Some morning they will find me dead—murdered."

Still a Mystery.

The State of Washington has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest of the murderers, the city of Bellingham has offered $500 more, and under the stimulus of this $1,000 detectives are digging and probing, weaving their web about the two men under arrest, striving to learn about their past.

A Milwaukee attorney has been retained for the double purpose of looking after the interests of the Milwaukee relatives and heirs in the estate and doing all in his power to ferret out the identity of the murderer or murders and their motive.

Possibly if the men under arrest are brought to trial and compelled to face the certainty of punishment, they will then reveal the mystery of half a century in the life of the murdered wanderer.

Some day some new bonanza may be opened which has long lain unknown as the result of the Dames feud, and the man who for years pursued the wanderer, shadowing his life, and finally doing him to death so brutally, may be able to enjoy in such peace as his conscience and his own fears leave him, the wealth which many believe is at the bottom of the mystery—this unusual mystery in these prosaic days of an inherited feud ending in vengeance by a second generation.

Things You Should Know About the New Lamp Shades

NOT long since it was considered quite possible to put elaborate lamp and candle shades upon any style of lamp and candle that suited one's fancy, but now that a better understanding of the artistic in housefurnishing has come to women a yellow shade, massed over with ruffles and roses, is not placed upon a red lamp, nor a pink shade upon a blue one. The relations of lamp and shade are so carefully studied that one is made to bring out all the beauties in the other, and each fully harmonizes with the other in color and design or else in material—as to metal—and form. Only one who has studied the subject fully realizes how certain colors harmonize with certain forms. The relation of form to color has never been fully understood in the making of lamp and candle shades, and few understand it now, although every one with a particle of taste is able to appreciate it.

Vases of various forms and sizes are selected wholly with a view to the size of the lamp shade which will be set over them, and the centre is just the size for the sort of lamp-well desired. The well sets in the vase, which is first decorated in the color and style of the shade it is to complement, and the right sizes of rings and supports are fitted around the lamp. If the shade is in cherry blossoms and tints, to suit these delicate flowers the lamp is painted in the same design, with a softly shaded background of color.

Sometimes these lamps will be so planned that blossoms seem to float out of a soft grayish-green mist or shadow.

The lamp of to-day is not merely something with which to furnish light, but it becomes an object of adornment to the home.

The smart lamp and candle shade appears in a number of shapes, all built in relation to the shapes and tints of the furniture in the room in which the lamp is to be used. A bronze lamp of quaint shape does not fit in with drawing-room furniture, nor a large, richly tinted clay one of quaint form with a Pompadour bedroom or boudoir. They harmonize better with hall, dining room and library furniture, while a man's den is fitted up with lamps made especially for such a room.

There are certain shades of red, green, yellow, pink and even blue, that light up beautifully, while tints of brown, in dead leaf colors and bronze, will give out wonderfully charming effects in shades.

White, on the contrary, does not light up as well as cream and golden tints, and mauves and purples and some blues are simply ghastly, however beautiful they may appear when unlighted.

Grass cloth shades look well in richly tinted decorations, and a beautiful trimming for all such shades is straw braid.

Straw braid is made in many widths, several styles of braiding, and in practically all colors and shades, besides often being braided in mingled color effects. The braid is sewed around the bottoms and tops of lamp shades, and is sometimes used to outline panels. It can be selected to add materially to the beauty of the coloring and design of the shade decoration.

Grass cloth forms a beautiful shade. Its ground color is that of a pale, dry leaf, and its decorative scheme is carried out in tulips of different colors. Around the bottom is sewed straw braid in natural straw color, braided with green, while a narrow green straw braid trims the top. A warm glow is given the shade by an under lining of red, finished with flounces of red gauze put on full beneath and loose from the edges. This is an example of a pleated shade, a favorite shape for very tall lamps, and pretty in all sizes of shades, from the tiny candle shade to the big umbrella.

One of the most attractive shapes for lamp shades is also shown. It is a little thing, suitable for a tiny lamp or candle, and is made with four panels of grass cloth with triangular tops on the panels. The shape of these is quite fascinating and not less so in a big lamp. The edges of the panels are finished with gold gimp upon a linen colored ground, and the decoration is in red hollyhocks and green foliage.

Mrs. Astor's Egyptian Dinner with Pyramids, the Sphinx, and a Miniature Desert, Wh r: her Guests Dug for Jewels with Little Gold Picks and Shovels.

THE unchallenged statement that 70,000 underfed New York children go to school every morning without their breakfasts has served to focus attention on the wasteful extravagance of the money-mad rich. "What is wrong with society?" ask the clergymen.

Howard Gould has just spent $500,000 for a cow and chicken house: W. K. Vanderbilt is spending $50,000 for a private car: Mrs. Clarence W. Mackay spent $50,000 for a bathtub hewed out of a single block of marble; young Bradley Martin spent $40,000 on his own wedding clothes; William Waldorf Astor gave a dinner party in Egypt last month, the dinner table being set as a miniature desert, and each guest dug up jewels with tiny gold picks and shovels, and Senator Clark, impatient at the delayed bronze work on his new Fifth avenue house, has bought up five large bronze foundries, cancelled all outside orders and is running the works for his own house decoration.

These half dozen recent examples of the abuse of wealth illustrate the tendency of the times. In varying degree this same spirit of selfish, wasteful extravagance is seen in every direction, sometimes with ruinous influence on those of small means who try to follow and imitate the rich. At the Belmont race track over $1,000,000 is bet on a brisk afternoon—some of this is lost by unfortunate wage-earners who ape the fashionable rich. In England Sir Robert Griffin estimates that $25,000,000 a year is lost at the race tracks by the idle rich.

Extravagance of a Fashionable Wedding.

In yachts the American rich have invested more than $43,000,000, and another $10,000,000 in clubhouses. J. Pierpont Morgan's Corsair, Mrs. Robert Goelet's Nahma and W. K. Vanderbilt's Valiant each represent an amusement investment of more than half a million dollars.

While there are quite frequent instances of almost incredible wastes of great sums on weddings, yet even the "ordinary" fashionable wedding of the day is extravagant beyond any sense. Lady Violet Greville, the lovely sister of the Countess Warwick, estimates that the expenses of the average wedding in fashionable society in England amount to $10,800. Lady Violet itemizes the expenses of a fashionable wedding as follows:

Trousseau	$5,000
Jewels	2,500
Floral decorations and bouquets	1,000
Champagne	600
Refreshments	500
Church expenses	250
Bridesmaids' presents	200
Sundries	250

In addition to this, she says the presents received are more valuables than they used to be. Bridegrooms get motor cars, sable coats and rich plate, instead of the pins and umbrellas of former days, while well-known brides obtain enough gems to stock a jeweller's shop and sufficient furniture to fill a large house.

In many other respects bridal fashions are changing. Long engagements are unfashionable in our world of hurry and bustle. A month is quite an ordinary period of duration for the engagement, and a girl is engaged and married off almost before her friends have become cognizant of the fact. With the curtailing of the wedding feast has come also the curtailing of the honeymoon—a week is the maximum, two days the minimum; then back to the tireless whirl of society in its money-mad search of amusement.

In the "small things," the daily details of life in the money world, is everywhere shown the same reckless extravagance. New York, the home of the American multi-millionaire, leads the other American cities in wastefulness of wealth.

Its luxury madness has made it the only American city where have been given $100,000 fetes and dinners that have cost $500 a plate, and where gold plate service was used costing $50,000.

It is the only American city that possesses a hotel with a $10,000 bed.

Waiters Get $100 Tips.

Its madness of extravagance has made it the only American city where waiters have been tipped with $100 bills, where $250 has been paid for a pink to be worn one day, where countless thousands are squandered on the toys which entertain for a minute.

Modern fashionable existence is more or less in the public eye—home life and the family circle do not suffice. So the great city hotels and restaurants have become a part of the millionaire's life. They must therefore be keyed to his pitch of extravagance. When fashionable society is in town the great cafes and restaurants are at the height of their gayety. Sundays or week days the coming of night is now a signal for Broadway and Fifth avenue to twinkle forth with a sort of yellow joy. Never, in fact, have so many new and gorgeous hostelries and dining places been open for patronage. Representing an aggregate investment of more than $40,000,000, and "the season" being short, the prices must be high enough to pay for the dull business of the eight idle months of the year. Chef Prosper Grevilot, whose $10,000 salary is one of the Delmonico expenses, constructs the following menu for a dinner party and charges $50 a plate:

Huitres, Sauce Mignonette.
Consomme Duchesse. Amontillado.
Mousseline a la Moleski.
Radis. Olives de Luegue. Celeri en branch.
Bass Rayee aux Dauphin.
Tomatoes Farcies a la Trevisse.

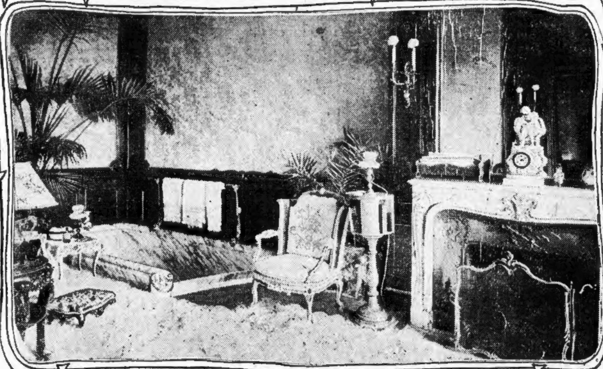
Canards Canvasbuck. Gelee de Groville.
Salade.
Charlotte Parisienne.
Glaces. Peits Fours. Fruits. Bonbons.
Cafe.



Mrs. Clarence W. Mackay's $50,000 Imported Marble Bathtub.

Little dinner parties at $50 to $100 a plate are served at a dozen restaurants and hotels every night of the season. Especially wanton extravagance is now and then devised by some young spendthrift like "Jimmy" Hyde, of the notorious bal poudre last Winter. What this revel of extravagance cost the vice-president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society will never be fully known.

Supper for his five hundred guests was served in the small ballroom, canopied and so arranged as to resemble a tent pitched on the lawn at Versailles. Under the canopy were hundreds of rose bushes sprinkled with vari-colored electric bulbs, each table of the sixty or more being built around a rose bush in full bloom. The supper alone, including the dining room decorations, is estimated to have cost $15,000. Yet the menu, exclusive of wines, was comparatively simple, as may be seen by the following:

Consomme Voltaire.
Escalopes de Homard a la Rejane.
Faisan Pique Louis XV.
Salade Mme. de Pompadour.
Jambon a la Gelee Princesse.
Glace a la Reine.
Petits Fours. Bonbons.
Fruits.
Cafe. Pol Roger, '89.

Gorgeous as was this function, it was only a scene in the establishment, just as the latter was but a passing scene in the great dining drama being enacted simultaneously in the blazing cafes and brilliant hotels of the surrounding metropolis. Closely crowding each other in what is called the hotel and cafe district are now nearly a hundred establishments noteworthy for a prevailing tone of artistry and luxuriousness.

Her Poodle Costs $2,000 a Year.

But the guests of Mr. Hyde at his revel of wastefulness were themselves quite accustomed to such displays of money madness—most of them, indeed, victims of the same disease. The women were the fashionable set of Newport in Summer, of the opera boxes in Winter, of the automobiles in Central Park on pleasant days, of the race track and the horse show. These are the women who squander absurd sums on dogs; a thousand dollars a year or more on dog clothes alone. They buy house coats, walking coats, dusters, sweaters, coats lined with ermine at two hundred dollars each, automobile coats with hoods and goggles, and each coat fitted with a pocket for the poodle's handkerchief of fine linen or lace.

These women buy for their pet dogs boots of different colored leather to match the coats, house boots, street boots, etc., that lace up nearly to the knee and cost from five to eight dollars a pair. They buy half a dozen pairs at a time. And then they buy collars set with rubies, pearls, or diamonds at several hundred dollars each. A man who makes a specialty of such collars recently told of a woman who imported from Paris a complete outfit for her poodle costing two thousand dollars. And one lady had a house built for her dog, the exact model of a Queen Anne cottage, with rooms papered and carpeted and the windows hung with lace curtains. Every morning a woman calls (a sort of dog governess) to bathe and comb and curl and perfume the little darling, and then take him out for his walk. He eats and drinks from silver dishes, and if he gets a stomach ache a specialist is promptly summoned.

Forty Millions on Clothes.

Taking up the question of extravagance in dress, Professor Edward Atkinson says that the only reason why men probably spend less than women on dress is due to the fact that it is not good form for a man to become conspicuous in his dress, while in some classes of society the more conspicuous a woman becomes by the use of color and texture the better dressed she is assumed to be. This may be true if she knows how to dress in good taste, but quite the reverse when a woman without taste becomes conspicuous for the extravagance of her dress and her display of jewelry, which often creates a doubt in the mind of men whether she belongs to the beau-monde or the demi-monde.

A magazine writer, who claims to have carefully gathered his facts from robe makers and milliners and all other available sources of information, estimates that 6,000 women of New York spend no less than $40,000,000, or an average of $6,000 each, on their yearly wardrobe.

If these figures are correct, then less than one per cent of the women of New York spend on their clothes a sum greater than is devoted to the city's gigantic school system and nearly forty per cent of the entire municipal budget.

Atkinson may say that these $6,000 a year dressers do not dress well. They turn themselves into modistes' and milliners' manikins. They are animated showcases of laces and jewels.

The difference in dress between the extravagant and sanely economical is by no means so marked as the cost might seem to indicate. The woman with $6,000 worth of clothes cannot wear them all at once. One of the agonies of the opulent, perhaps, is that though she may own twenty gowns she can wear but one.

In dress, of course, lies one of the most glaring extravagances of the modern woman of fashion. There would seem to be no limit to what a single gown may cost. The son $500,000 dress worn last year by Mrs. Lars Anden at the Royal Drawing Room in London is perha example as any. This was called a "moonlight g sewn with pearls and spangled with real diamonds It was a gown of shimmering satin softly losing dazzling lengths of a court train of cloth of silver tulle, like moonlight shining through the fretwork The whole effect of the gown was to suggest a bril idyl of Spring. In glittering folds the gown fell corsage magnificently wrought in real emeralds, wh brought strongly out by the diamond settings ming Upon her laboriously coiled head Mrs. Anderson w emeralds, picked out in diamonds, that was more many a queen's crown. able and beautiful decoration was intermingled with a delicate fretwork of pearls and diamonds over the gown and sewn in such a manner as to accentuate the beauty of the decorative scheme.

The splendor of the gown, however, culminated in the corsage, which was draped in sheer silver tulle that was confined beneath a wide stomacher wrought in rare jewels, which vied with the fringes of jewels that fell over the tulle draperies, and the sparks and rays of vivid light which they emitted. These rays seemed concentrated in the jewelled ornaments and epaulettes which decorated the shoulders and held in place the court train. The arms glimmered delicately beneath the loops and fringes of jewels which fell over them from the shoulder, and the sparkling rays of the emerald necklace were repeated in those which flashed from the tiara which graced the hair piled softly about the head.

Here we have the triumph of the modern millionairess when wanton wastefulness of money is turned to her own spectacular adornment. And the recent Egyptian dinner party of William Waldorf Astor illustrates the selfish abuse of wealth by the modern man of millions—for, if he is forbidden by custom to spend it on his clothes, he can spread a feast of diamonds and blink in self glorification at the applause of his guests, who swallow his food and clutch his jewelled souvenirs.

Mr. Astor found himself in Cairo the latter part of April, and the Pyramids and Sphynx inspired him to a noble effort. Mr. Astor was once an American, but his habits of extravagance and admiration of royalty caused such comment that he declared that America was no fit place for a gentleman to live. Mr. Astor's ample fortune is still invested in America, though he is now a subject of King Edward, and the friendship of the British monarch protects him from comment and criticism in England.

Mr. Astor decided to give a banquet—the details of the menu and the wines were left to a British caterer. But the chief feature of the dinner Mr. Astor attended to himself. He had a big square table built, stating seven guests on each of the four sides—the table was twenty feet square. In the middle of the table was the great desert of Egypt, reproduced in miniature. The white sands of the desert were sugar and exquisitely moulded little figures of men, women and camels, and caravans were wending their way hither and thither. There were little oases fringed with diminutive palms, with bits of verdure and running water. Rising from the centre of the table were miniature reproductions of the famous Pyramids and the Sphynx, with the Nile flowing lazily along and little boats and Arab boatmen floating with the current.

ONE OF MRS. HOWARD GOULD'S HENS.—EVERY EGG SHE LAYS COSTS A $5 GOLD PIECE.

After the ices had been served came Mr. Astor's great coup. Little gold picks and shovels were handed to the guests and they were told to explore the desert. Near each plate, buried in the sugar-sand of the imitation desert was a piece of antique Egyptian jewelry. Eagerly the guests explored, and each one brought forth the golden souvenir. Each jewel had been purchased by Mr. Astor at a cost of about a thousand dollars apiece and were authentic bits of antique jewelry brought to light by recent Egyptian explorers.

Mrs. Lars Anderson, in her half-a-million-dollar moonlight dre and Mr. Astor at his thousand-dollar-apiece-souvenir dinne tract attention because they are single examples of conspicu great extravagance. But in lesser degree the same spirit prev among the rich according to their means. In fact, Mr. Astor w better able to give his desert dinner than a moderately well-to-do New York broker who recently gave a banquet and dropped a diamond at the bottom of each guest's glass of sparkling champagne. And Mrs. Lars Anderson was more easily able to pay for her extravagant gown than many a woman who spends only a thousand dollars on a ball dress. The evidences of the selfish abuse of wealth are as apparent among the moderately wealthy as among the "big rich." While Howard Gould spends $1,000,000 building a sea wall around his Long Island home, his sister, Anna Gould (the Countess Castellane) spends $10,000 for a bed, and Harry Thaw, of Pittsburg, writes a check for $1,500 for the best apartments on a Transatlantic liner, and an unknown American pays $4,000 for the puppy dog, "Southport Sculptor."

How the Goulds Strained Their Resources.

Sometimes the reckless extravagance of the moderately rich brings its own punishment. Anna Gould's comfortable fortune was so wildly dissipated that the courts finally intervened and stopped her extravagances. Howard Gould's fortune is not enormous, and yet he is pouring money into his country estate with princely hand—a cowhouse costing $250,000, a stone chicken house costing $150,000, with a specially designed iron fence around the poultry yard at $10 a running foot. It is estimated that every egg laid in his henhouse will represent an outlay of five dollars. The great country mansion itself is planned to cost $4,000,000.

Philadelphia was amazed at the prodigality of the millionaires who rolled in to visit the Horse Show. "That strange pungent smell of burning money to which our noses are not accustomed has permeated this city ever since the show opened," writes a correspondent.

The Moore brothers, of Chicago, came in for a large share of the money-spending notoriety. J. Hobart Moore had the reputation of being the king of spenders at the Horse Show, though his brother was a close second.

The J. Hobart Moores occupied a suite of twelve rooms on the fifth floor of the Bellevue-Stratford. When they arrived from Chicago in a private car there were seven in the party, including the servants. Since they have been here a number of guests have been invited to the suite. The suite alone costs over $100 a day—just the rooms. In addition to the regular guests, the Moores are always surrounded by a large company. They would rather do the entertaining than be entertained, and it is said that one who has been a guest of the J. Hobart Moores never had cause to complain of lack of entertainment.

J. Hobart Moore is an epicure. His ordinary table expenses are about $200 a day. In addition to this, elaborate dinners are given that cost from $50 to $75 per plate, and with from eight to twelve covers. That does not include the wine bill, which on these occasions amounts to several hundred dollars. The railroad magnates like variety in wines, and oftentimes only half of the wines ordered and paid for are consumed.

Mr. J. Hobart Moore has a strong passion for flowers, and it costs the millionaire from $75 to $100 or more a day to satisfy her whims in this respect. Her own room in the suite is continually filled with the rarest of flowers, and the table decorations most elaborate. The table decorations are changed three times a day, and Mrs. Moore always makes the selections.

Coaches, automobiles, carriages, telephone and telegraph tolls, liberal tips and the like are indulged in to extravagance. J. Hobart Moore seldom writes a letter. He would rather pay $25 telephone tolls for a fifteen-minute conversation than to write and wait for an answer. In fact, 60 per cent of his business is done by telephone.

A young woman in Mr. Moore's party in Philadelphia once wondered how the water was at Atlantic City.

"Do you wish you were there to find out?" asked Mr. Moore.

"Well, I haven't been there this season," she replied.

Before the hotel was reached it had been planned for the party to go to Atlantic City. One of the men suggested looking up the train time, but the host declared they would go in their own car. While Horse Show togs were being changed for automobile togs the millionaire hired the speediest car he could find at the garages in North road street.

Before the party started word was sent to one of the big hotels at the seaside resort for a dinner. Mr. Moore suggested the menu in his message, and when, two hours later, the party arrived at the beach, all was prepared for them. The meal was very elaborate. After a stroll along the Boardwalk the party returned the same night. At the Bellevue-Stratford they found another appetizing meal awaiting them. The trip is said to have cost Mr. Moore about $300.

Dinners of from six to twelve covers have been given daily, at a cost of about $50 per plate, while the wine bills have been as heavy as they conceivably could be.

Mrs. Vanderbilt has a penchant for flowers, and her rooms are always filled with the most fragrant buds. Roses are her specialty, and hundreds of them are ordered daily. She takes a personal interest in the decoration of her table, and no expense is spared to carry out her wishes. Her bill for flowers averages daily with that of Mrs. J. Hobart Moore.

It is estimated that J. Hobart Moore spent $1,000 a day in entertaining during the week. That does not include the great expense of his stable. It is said that $500 a day would cover the entertaining expenses of the other millionaires.

Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, pastor of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, addressing the Long Island Methodist Preachers' Association, denounced costly social banquets and the lavish expenditure of money on dogs. He said, in part:

"Nero shod his mules with silver. Perhaps it was from him that New York women borrowed the idea of clothing their pet dogs in purple and fine linen. In this city are women who spend $1,000 a year for clothes for poodle dogs. Those creatures wear ermine-lined coats worth $200 apiece, and in each dear little coat for each dear little dog there is a pocket for the poodle's lace handkerchief. They wear collars set with precious stones valued at hundreds of dollars.

"New Yorkers have not only fattened their vanity upon high-priced dogs, but, as already indicated, vanity is the toastmaster at their extravagant banquets. New York not long ago took a step in advance of ancient Rome, when steamed rhinoceros was served at a fashionable hotel.

"Let us not be too severe on heathen Rome. Remember that we have monkey dinners, jungle dinners and horseback dinners here. Surely the shade of Nero pales before the comparison!"

The effect of this reckless extravagance upon those who cannot afford it is well illustrated by the pitiful example of "Tod" Sloane, once the greatest jockey in the world.

Tod Sloane's Pitiful Extravagance.

This youth made more money for some time than he could spend, though he threw it away and aped the spendthrifts of the 400. Now it is said that he wept when a $5 bet on the favorite at Gravesend lost. It was his last cent.

For a few years he ruled the turf. He was a tremendous favorite in the United States. Bettors backed "Tod" Sloane, regardless of his mounts, and made money. He won race after race and was recognized as the foremost jockey in the world. When he went abroad he had all his British cousins "tied to a post." He won many of the big events on the British turf, until he was taken up by the King's representative, Lord William Beresford.

He lived more sumptuously than a millionaire. The fame of his clothes rivalled his fame as a jockey. He spent money like water. In Saratoga he paid $150 a day for August Belmont's quarters in the United States Hotel.

The future was rosy for him and he "exercised" his money. He could not spend it as fast as he earned it, but he did not hoard it by any means, and when the rainy days came they found him without a waterproof.

A Western speculator whose vagaries keep him much in the public eye gave a dinner some time ago at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel where four shares of United States Steel stock, neatly folded in the napkins, were laid at each place. And another Wall Street magnate being taken with the charms of a young married woman, hit upon this way of making her accept a valuable present that he would not otherwise have dared to offer. He invited a pleasant company to dine with him at a conspicuous hotel, and, in the course of the meal, each lady received a "souvenir" of jewelry worth two or three hundred dollars, but the "souvenir" given to the lady of his preference was worth a cool thousand. They say she left the dining room with cheeks aflame!

Plates of Solid Gold.

This recalls the Roman dinner described by Petronius, when at a certain moment "the panels of the ceiling slid apart and suddenly a great hoop as though shaken from a hogshead was let down, having golden crowns with jars of perfume hanging about its entire circumference. These we were invited to accept as keepsakes."

On an occasion at Palm Beach were given stacks of chips worth fifteen dollars each at the gambling tables of the near-by casino where presently the guests were risking these chips as a part of the entertainment.

Not only is it true that a number of millionaires in America own plates of solid gold or silver gilt (which latter is considered good enough for European royalty,) but there are rich families who boast sets of china costing from three to five thousand dollars a dozen, so that the breaking of a single plate means the loss of several hundred dollars.

The "fabulous sums" said to have been squandered at play by the ancients would doubtless excite only indulgent smiles in our great gamesters. Thus Nero's famous stake of four hundred thousand sesterces (twenty thousand dollars,) on a single throw of the dice and Marie Antoinette's hazard of one hundred and forty thousand livres (twenty-eight thousand dollars,) on a turn of the cards at faro, has at least once been exceeded by a princely husband of one of our Western heiresses, who let it out that once in Germany he risked half a million marks (about one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars), on a throw of the dice—and lost!

Nor are we far behind the ancients in the fantastic features of our banquets. Petronius relates that "a whole boar is served up with suckling pigs of pastry, a slave rips open the boar and a number of little birds fly out into the room." But it is only a few years since a rich New Yorker gave a bachelor dinner at his "studio" where an enormous chicken pie was brought in and when the pie was opened not only did birds fly forth but a maiden scantily attired stepped out after them!

And fathers and mothers of the hungry little New York school children, as they trudge to school without their breakfasts, ask: "What is wrong with society?"

A TRAMP WHO WAS REALLY A GENTLEMAN AND A GENTLEMAN WHO WAS WORSE THAN A TRAMP.

HOW THE SOCIETY BEAUTY MISS BLANCHE FARLEY KISSED A RAGGED HOBO FOR SAVING HER LIFE; AND HOW THE ATHLETIC MISS JENNIE HEADE THUMPED AN ADMIRER WHO FORGOT HIS MANNERS.

"Without an instant's hesitation Miss Failey put her gloved hands on the tramp's ragged shoulders and leaned over and kissed him."

WHOEVER believes that chivalry is dead should read of the ragged tramp who refused the purse of the lady whom he had rescued from almost certain death, and went on his way richly rewarded by a kiss from her lips. Contrarily, whoever doubts the ability of women nowadays to protect themselves against the attentions of "gentlemen" whose manners are worse than those of tramps, should read of the "gentleman" who was soundly thrashed by the lady whom he annoyed.

Doubtless the tramp is still in his rags, but with a warm glow in his heart that will last for the rest of his lifetime. No one knows his name, nor why he is a tramp. Perhaps he is a tramp because his love for the good, the true and the beautiful will not permit him to associate with gentlemen. It is known that he is a poet at heart, which, nowadays, few gentlemen are.

It is known that on a bright morning at the beginning of this Summer this tramp, in rags, with many days' beard on his cheeks, was walking along the beautifully shaded Old York road in the outskirts of Germantown, near Philadelphia. At the same hour Miss Blanche Failey, a charming member of the younger set of Philadelphia society, had left the fashionable Belfield Country Club and was driving along that same road in her brake behind a spirited pair of horses.

What followed indicated that the tramp, as the brake drew near behind him, was communing with nature and reciting appropriate bits from the famous poets. Perhaps he was thinking that this was the road to Camelot in King Arthur's time, and that he was a young knight going to the jousts, there to defend even to the death the colors of his lady love. As such he was sworn by the rules of his order to protect ladies in distress.

The Lady in Distress

If these were the thoughts in the tramp's mind, they were appropriately interrupted by a piercing scream that could come only from a distressed lady. Turning quickly he beheld a lady as beautiful as any seen in his day-dreams, and in undeniable distress. She had lost control of the horses she was driving, who were dashing madly on, while the carriage in which she was seated swayed from side to side in momentary danger of upsetting.

There was no time in which to consider ways and means. Straight out of his chivalrous day-dreams the tramp plunged into the reality of chivalrous action. The maddened steeds were upon him. As they flew past he seized the bridle of the nearest, clung suspended from the tossing head while iron-shod hoofs tore to ribbons his garments that were already rags. He never thought of loosing his hold to save himself.

The victory of all good knights was that of the tramp. Presently the plunging steeds stood quiet in the road. Beside them, looking like a human scarecrow, his hands scratched and bleeding, hatless, covered with dust and flecked with foam, stood the tramp, bowing low to the lady, not a hair of whose head was hurt.

"Oh, how brave you are!" she exclaimed. "How can I ever thank you enough?"

The tramp bowed again, put his hand on his heart, and quoted something about—

The light that lies
In woman's eyes.

His manner was so perfectly respectful and his act had been so genuinely heroic that Miss Failey neither feared him in the slightest degree nor thought him fantastic.

"You must realize that you have saved me from death," she said.

Miss Blanche Failey.

The tramp merely bowed again, and quoted:

Beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,

No Money Reward for Him.

"And all because of your heroic conduct," said Miss Failey. "You must permit me to reward you." And she drew a purse of silver network from her chatelaine bag.

But the tramp put out his hand with a gesture of modest refusal, saying:

"Virtue hath its own reward," and then, with a bow lower than any of his others, quoted:

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

"I understand," said Miss Failey, "you are a gentleman and give a gentleman's reasons for refusing anything of value as a reward for a noble action. But you are poor, while I am rich. Besides, your clothing has suffered in your great service to me. You must at least have a new suit to remember me by."

With deep respect the tramp bowed again and shook his head. Then his ragged-bearded face was lighted with a smile, and he quoted:

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine.
Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
And I'll not look for wine.

"Do you mean"—and Miss Failey stopped abashed at the unconventionality of what she was about to say. Yet the ragged fellow, with all the poets at his tongue's end, seemed to have about him a halo of chivalry. Suddenly the tramp approached respectfully to the side of the carriage and said:

"Lady, to have had the privilege to stand between you and possible harm, fills me with joy and gratitude. No reward is due me. Yet there is one reward which any lady might bestow, if her heart should be so inclined, the memory of which would lighten the heaviest burden the future may have in store for me. I shall be happy hereafter even without that reward, but one kiss from your lips would"—

The Lady Kissed the Tramp.

Without an instant's hesitation Miss Failey put her gloved hands on the tramp's ragged shoulders and leaned over and kissed him. The next moment he was standing back by the side of the road with a gesture that meant that she had more than cancelled every obligation and might drive on in the full conviction that she had made a fellow being happy beyond words.

Grateful for this last proof of the tramp's delicacy of feeling Miss Failey drove home, and with moist eyes told of her adventure. Such a strong impression did the tramp's behavior make upon her throughout, that she was able even to recall the poetry he had quoted.

Germantown, Pa., was also the scene of the downfall of the "gentleman" whose manners proved to be so much worse than those of the average tramp. The heroine in this instance is Miss Jennie Heade. At a social gathering about a month ago a young man whom she had never seen before, and who was expensively and foppishly dressed, forced his attentions upon Miss Heade. He did not wait to be properly introduced, and before that evening was over his behavior had become so obnoxious that he had lost all chance of gaining that privilege.

The Tramp Miss Failey Kissed.
From a snapshot taken by one of her friends.

Miss Heade is employed in Germantown as a stenographer. On the morning after the party, as she was leaving her home to go to her work she saw the same man hanging about. He followed her and made many attempts to engage her in conversation. Everything about him bespoke that most objectionable creature known as a "masher."

When Miss Heade left her employer's office to go home that evening the man was again at her heels, with attentions more obnoxious than ever. The young woman reached home in a state of deep indignation. She told her brother, Harry, about her experience. He weighs 170 pounds and is an amateur pugilist.

She Would Punish Him Herself.

"I'll fix the fellow," said Harry Heade. "We'll leave the house together to-morrow morning."

"No," said the girl, to her brother's amazement. "No, you mustn't touch him. You shall teach me to box and I'll give him his lesson myself. It will be much more effective."

After the manner of big brothers, young Heade attempted to convince his sister that this was not the kind of work for a girl. But she was firm, and so he began to give her daily lessons in the mysteries of uppercuts, jabs, swings and cross-counters, including corresponding means of escaping punishment. Miss Heade is a hearty wholesome girl who has always taken plenty of outdoor exercise. As her persecutor was still following her about she had ample incentive, and at the end of two weeks was able to land on her big brother with a force that gave him much confidence in her ability to knock out an ordinary man.

Her persecutor remained in blissful ignorance of what was in store for him. He had grown so bold as to follow her daily to the door of her employer's office in the morning, and to wait there for her reappearance in the evening. As she wished to make the coming lesson as public as possible she restrained herself from a too resentful manner to him. She was rewarded one Sunday, when she saw him following her to church.

Miss Jennie Heade.

As she entered the First Methodist Church of Germantown he was close at her heels, and found a seat in the pew adjoining her own. All through the sermon he ogled her. These attentions were so marked as to attract attention of many in the congregation. A few knew of the exact situation, and so, at the close of the service, quite a number of the congregation followed Miss Heade down Germantown avenue toward her home.

The girl's persecutor was soon at her side. Those in the rear saw him lift his hat with a smirk and say something in Miss Heade's ear. Whatever this was, it precipitated the long-prepared climax.

Wheeling about on her left heel, she shot out her right arm. Biff! The man's hat fell off from the shock of a jolt on his right jaw. Then, in a second, a jab with her left on his other jaw made him stagger. Seeing that the man was too dazed to make any attempt to defend himself, Miss Heade finished him then and there. A terrific right swing with which her brother had assured her she was especially effective dropped him groaning and helpless in the street.

Soundly Beaten by a Girl.

While the man lay there, just sufficiently conscious to understand the extent of his humiliation, Miss Heade explained to her fellow members of the congregation all the prolonged provocation and the careful preparation which had led up to this most satisfactory climax.

Naturally now Miss Heade is an earnest advocate of the manly art of self-defence. Her persecutor has never since been seen in her neighborhood.

"For such a fellow to be whipped by a girl's brother," said Miss Heade, in advising all women to learn to use their fists, "is not half so effective as for him to find himself whipped by the girl herself. Probably he half expects the former, and if it comes, expects to get even. But how can a man get even when the woman attends to the whipping herself?"

This view meets with such approval among her friends that six of the prettiest girls in Miss Heade's social circle have formed a class in boxing under her tutelage and will presently be as ready and as competent as herself to rebuke unwelcome attentions from the other sex.

Some Secrets of Nature's Remarkable Cures.

THE medicinal hot springs in some parts of Europe and the natural hot waters owned by the United States Government at Hot Springs, Ark., have always puzzled science, for, while the curative effect of the hot water was beyond doubt, no chemical analysis ever revealed anything to satisfactorily account for it. It could hardly be supposed, says the London Lancet, that a few grains per gallon of chalk, sulphate of lime, common salt and so on could have any marked beneficial influence. The waters of Bath, Buxton, Contrexeville and Hot Springs, Ark., exhibit a comparatively feeble degree of mineralization, and yet there can be no doubt of their therapeutic value. Nor can it be supposed that a water which is naturally hot can have greater therapeutic effects than would be gained by the similar use of artificially heated water. So far, then, the findings of the physicist and the chemist do not afford a satisfactory hypothesis in regard to the therapeutic value of such waters.

The question now arises whether the fact that these waters are radioactive will supply any explanation. Most, if not all, of the thermal springs in Europe which have been examined have been found to contain in slightly varying quantities argon and helium, and in the majority of cases these waters have been found to be distinctly radioactive. Indeed, the presence of argon and helium would appear to be inseparable from radioactive properties. We seem here to be getting some light at length on what has long been an enigma, that of two waters showing the same chemical composition as regards their saline constituents; the one of natural origin is distinctly superior, therapeutically speaking, to the one artificially compounded.

The fact is that a natural water welling up from the earth is at the moment of its discharge from its source radioactive, while ordinary drinking water, rain water, well water and the like do not generally exhibit this property to any extent. Further, since the property of radioactivity is rapidly evanescent, the emanation quickly vanishing, it follows that if the benefit derived from undergoing a course of waters is due to the radioactivity of those waters the treatment should obviously take place near the source of the waters—in other words, the waters should be used when they are showing a maximum degree of radioactivity.

WE all know the story of the woman who, when her husband offered her a hat or a house for a birthday present, reproachfully exclaimed, "Why, you know I can't wear a house on my [illegible]"

Just so much importance does a woman attach to her headgear, and quite rightly, for nothing makes or mars the appearance of a woman as does the hat she wears.

It is said that with a fan and a mantilla a Spanish woman can convey all moods, and wear and wield them so that they seem to speak a language of their own, and, invariably, the language of coquetry.

The American woman does with her hat what the Spanish woman does with her mantilla and fan; she is grave, or gay, coquettish or severe, business like or sportsman like, and, if she knows the art of choosing a hat, or has a Joseph to choose one for her, she will look equally bewitching in them.

Joseph, by the way, created the hats shown upon this page, and they represent the different smart shapes and sizes of dressy hats worn this season.

In the way of coloring, there has never been so great a variety of tints. All pale and delicate colors are in demand and bluets and mauves are especially good. Green, in many shades, is also a favorite color because it combines with so many other colors and also because green is a good deal worn at present in dresses and wraps. White, of course, is always a fashionable color for a Summer hat, and it is as smart as ever now. There are lots of hats made that appear white until examination reveals the fact that they are cream colored, or tinted in the very palest of shades of blue, mauve and yellow. There is merely a suggestion of color, but the point of rose or blue next the face gives a touch of vivacity not always to be found in a white hat.

We Americans have not a typical face that can be suited with any one style or shape of hat; we are a cosmopolitan race, and we have a cosmopolitan face, exacting much care in the shaping and making up of a hat to suit it. For this reason mostly all styles of hats are small now. Of course fashion decrees that they must all be small as compared to what we have been wearing—but there are degrees of smallness and some of the degrees are fairly good-sized.

Square Crowns Are Tabooed.

We have the large floppy crown, the conical crown, the sailor-shaped crown, the small, high crown, and the plaque that is crownless, or that has just a suggestion of a crown. Besides these we have crumpled crowns and three-cornered crowns, although one sees few of the latter; and square crowns are practically tabooed.

As for brims, however, they must all turn up high in the back or on the side. They are fluted and crumpled and curled over on the crown and generally manipulated so that they will prove most fetching in effect. Wonders can be done with the turn of a hat brim and the artistic curves of these are the acme of coquetry in certain positions and of sweet simplicity or reserved dignity in others.

One of the most fetching styles of hats appears as though the narrow back brim had been turned in front and the wide front one tilted up in the back. Such a brim is tilted down over the face and gives a dashing sort of look to the face of its wearer. It is either perfectly bewitching or perfectly the other thing.

A style that becomes the generality of faces best, has a medium-sized round brim in front and a turned up, fluted or bent brim in the back; with a good deal of trimming in the back and some underneath the brim to each side of the back. All the other styles of hats are adapted to certain faces and should be selected with discrimination.

I do not remember when so many flowers have been worn upon Summer hats. Usually our hats blossom out in the Spring time, with flowers as gay as those of nature, and later on we affect soft, filmy things for Summer usage, but this season flowers riot over all our hats and are mingled with feathers, both long and short, but usually of the ostrich persuasion.

Curling Plumes Are Smart.

Long white ostrich plumes that begin in front of a hat and curl all over the brim and down the back are immensely smart. They are sometimes fastened with a buckle to one side of the hat and float toward the back and upon the hair. Usually such plumes are in groups of two or three, and the other side of the hat is trimmed differently. Clusters of short and long plumes are also effectively arranged, the short ones being fastened to the bandeau under the brim and curling up above its tilted edge. The longer ones continue toward and over the back brim.

Oftentimes one or two roses are set where the feathers are fastened and furnish a lovely note of color near the face, in strong contrast to the snowy whiteness of the plumes—for most of the plumes worn this Summer are white.

Flowers and feathers may be said to be equally popular, and one lends a softness to the other, as a mist softens the brightness of a rainbow.

Perhaps some of the most becoming hats come in rose colors—all shades of rose colors, from purplish-red to palest pink, and among the variety of rose and violet hues one cannot fail to find one that is becoming.

One of the marked features of the season is the much-trimmed appearance of hats for street wear. Never before have hats for this purpose been as much trimmed as now. This is due to the fact that gowns for street wear are brighter in color and more elaborate to make than formerly. Altogether the street costume for this Summer is one that is both dressy and attractive. It becomes difficult, this being the case, to draw a sharp enough line of distinction between gowns that are just suitable to wear upon the street and those that are too dressy. It is in knowing just where to draw these lines of distinction that the really smart woman proclaims herself.

Tulle and White Plumes.

Figure A illustrates one of the best of the season's styles. It is of medium size and pure white. The crown is of embroidery on mull, alternating with rose lace. Tulle is loosely pleated both under and over the brim. The under side of the brim is trimmed with medallions of embroidery on lace, shaped like large rose petals, whose edges extend beyond the shirred edges of the hat. A group of white plumes curl gracefully up and under the left side of the brim and droop over the back. The brim of the hat is fluted in a shell shape and is turned up in the back and trimmed with white taffeta bows and loops.

The rose lace, which is the striking feature of the trimming, consists of large medallions shaped like rose petals with a tiny stem. The edge is scalloped and embroidered and the outer petal is of mull embroidered with small roses, while a centre of lace net has a large embroidered rose upon it. This lovely design is exquisitely brought out by the contrast of tulle and white plumes.

Another fetching hat is a small bluet chip, shown in Figure B. It is round in shape and slightly tilted to the left of the front. Around the crown is set a band of bluet velvet quilled on double. Loops and ends of the velvet trim the left side of the hat, and on toward the front of the brim, and with these are mingled two bunches of small bluet roses. A bandeau of pleated bluet velvet is finished with bows in the back and two bunches of roses up under the brim on the left side. Tulle is pleated around the brim next to the bandeau.

Quite a contrast to this, both in shape and coloring, is the mauve chip plateau shown in Figure C. It is that pinkish mauve tint which is so lovely and so becoming. The brim curls over upon the middle of the crown, and is turned up in flutes in the back. Folds of ribbon, of a lighter shade of mauve, encircle the crown—what there is of it—and that is artistically crumpled. A large rosette of the ribbon is set under the left side of the brim and the same sort of ribbon, covered with maline of similar shade, forms a band around the under part of the brim and follows its outlines where it is turned up on the side and back. Large clusters of pinkish-lavender lilacs and two shades of pink roses trim the brim on the upper and lower sides on the left. Both in form and color it is a beautiful creation.

The same may be said of figure D, a hat of thin horsehair braid and lace. It is creamy white in color, and the filmy lace which trims it is an inch wide, and put on in six rows around the low, conical crown and brim, and in four rows around the under side of the brim. This is turned up high on the left side, and also some on the back. A cluster of very deep pink roses is set against the hair on the left side of the front, and from this spring white plumes, curling up and back over the upturned brim.

Bluet-White Is Very Effective.

The little hat is tricorne in shape, with a point over the face, and one on each side. Bluet ribbon, put on in rose quilling, is set around the brim, nearly an inch from the edge. Roses of the same tint form a close wreath around the bandeau, being quite small at each side, and increasing in size toward the front. Wings of a lighter shade of blue are fastened on each side the turned-up brim, drooping in a downward and backward direction. The top of the hat is wholly unadorned, but as the brim is drawn close up against the crown there is not room for trimming. This little hat is just as smart as can be and the same may be said of the one shown in figure F.

This hat is a creamy tinted horsehair chip—a material new this season and very light and airy in effect. It is small and round in shape and has a rather low, round crown. The brim is rather narrow in front and wide at the back, where it is turned up high. Cream colored velvet ribbon of medium width is twisted loosely around the crown and the same ribbon forms a mass of loops and ends upon the back of the turned-up brim.

On the left side of the front is a bunch of pinkish-mauve gardenias with just a few green leaves to accentuate the beautiful coloring of the flowers. From this bunch springs a cluster of long white plumes, which float back around the hat and droop down upon the hair. A velvet band begins also at this bunch of flowers and disappears beneath the bows on the back of the brim. This hat is extremely coquettish in appearance and is one of the most fetching of the number shown.

So many women outside of New York and away from good milliners trim their own hats that a word about what the stores sell for such a purpose might prove interesting.

So many hats, both for young and old, are made entirely of open embroidery that it is a satisfaction to know that shapes of this embroidery can be purchased already to put together. These hats do not require other trimming than embroidery frills, but they are sometimes adorned with ribbons and flowers. On children and young girls they are lovely.

Much Crinoline Used in Hats.

One cannot always buy a hat that will match a gown in color, but lovely straw and hair braids of many kinds are sold by the bunch—coming in bunches of ten, twelve and twenty-four yards—and these braids are in every conceivable tint. The home milliner can buy a wire frame for from 15 to 30 cents—according to size and shape—and cover it with rows of plain or ruffled braid. Some lovely home-made hats and bonnets are made in this manner. A little chiffon, a few flowers or a feather or two can be added as trimming. Fancy braid hats do not require much trimming.

[illegible] leghorn hats are very smart this season while those of chiffon are rarely so. I [illegible] think I have seen a smart hat of chiffon this season.

Crinoline is much used for making hats. It looks much like chip, is very light and easily manipulated into odd shapes and curves.

Perhaps never before have such lovely flowers been made for hats as now. Among smart ones are roses of all kinds and colors, especially those of clear, light pink; deep purplish red and the dainty little baby ramblers. Blue and mauve roses are also extremely smart, and it is a fad of the season to mingle several tints of roses together on the same hat; as red, pink, blue and mauve. The last three colors are very much used in combination. Care must be taken to see that the colors blend and only certain shades are pretty used in this manner.

Lovely ombre ribbon and silk are also sold for trimming hats and are easily arranged in loops, bows and loose pleated effects.

HOW TO START HOUSEKEEPING---The Sixth Article in a New Series on Etiquette, by Mrs. Linda Hull Larned, Author of "The Hostess of To-day."

THE bride of to-day rarely goes into a hotel or boarding house to reside after the return from the wedding journey unless it be simply to tide over the time until the new home nest may be ready for occupancy. Often this interim is spent in the domicile of her own family, or perhaps under the roof of his people. Wherever they may alight as birds of passage, much of their time will be devoted to the business of nest building.

This nest may be a cozy little home of their own, or they may secure snug quarters in somebody's apartment house. There is as much comfort and happiness in one as in the other, prevailing views to the contrary notwithstanding. While the unattached house has many advantages, there is a great attraction in the convenience and freedom from care and responsibility that a housekeeper finds in an apartment—a flat—a home that is all on the level, with no furnace, no walks, no back yards, no cellars, no attics and no stairs to be taken care of. These are all given consideration by the young women of to-day who have learned how to housekeep and, too, have discovered how difficult it is to manage a menage. The little apartment of five, six or seven rooms is, therefore, an ideal way for the newly wed to begin. When the family consists of more than two, with a servant, the apartment outgrows its convenience and is inconsistent.

Apartments Have Advantages.

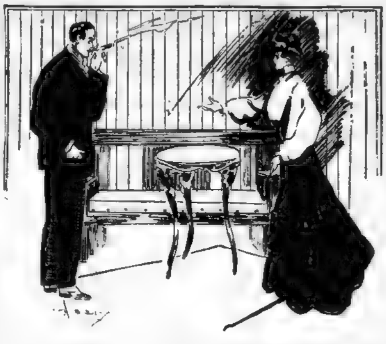
But whatever it may be, this beginning has the advantage of choice and selection, choice in surroundings, choice in furnishings, and the safest, most satisfactory way, as the years roll on, is the slowest way. The selection of furniture and equipment should be so guarded, so thoroughly investigated from every viewpoint, that there may be no regrets in after years for unwise expenditures in the beginning. Many impetuous beginners find themselves at the end of five or ten years saddled with furniture and belongings that are handicaps to their further advancement in artistic home-making. They are too expensive to discard and too ugly for any one to buy—besides second hand furniture, unless it be veritable antique of good quality and design, does not bring enough to pay for its cartage to the auction room.

Big prices are often paid by these beginners for furniture that in five years becomes atrocious from the standard of good taste.

Do Not Buy Cheap Rugs.

So the wise couple will not plunge in at once to buy everything needed. They will get along with as little as possible at first, from time to time adding a table or a chair, or a rug, or a picture, selecting them as they would the books for their library, to be lifelong friends and loving companions, these inanimate things which go to make the "lares et penates" of their home existence.

In selecting the home or flat convenience, air and sunlight should be the first consideration. Then the floors, which should be of hard wood, to be sparsely covered with rugs at first, and the walls of one or two toned paper, to be quite as bare as the floors in the beginning. The colors of one room opening into another should harmonize, even if they be a decided contrast. The colors in a home should be restful and yet vivifying.



"The wise young couple will not plunge in at once to buy everything needed. They will get along with as little as possible at first, from time to time adding a table, chair, rug or picture."

Do not buy cheap rugs—the gaudy kind—and do not buy cheap pictures and bric-a-brac. One or two good things in a room are better to live with than a confusion of even artistic clutter. One good Oriental rug in the living room, another in the hall, with Japanese, Deerfield, or even Scotch rugs in the other rooms, make a good beginning.

When buying furniture, do not mix Mission designs with antique or even modern productions. Have the entire room of antique mahogany, or use only such as are built on the same lines. Whether the wood be carved, or straight and square, do not have too much upholstery and stuffs that will not clean easily, and never put fringe on anything. Cushions with removable covers, and pillow slips that are washable prevail to-day in all well furnished homes. The same idea predominates in curtains and draperies. Curtains that will wash and draperies that will clean, and as few of them as possible, is the diction of this sanitary age.

Where Good Taste Counts.

A jumble of different kinds of furniture and fittings in one room jars upon the nerves, and is not in the least an evidence of good taste or good management.

It is far better management to furnish the entire establishment with one kind of furniture, especially if it be a small house, or an apartment, than to let the Mission idea prevail in one room, the Empire or Louis Quinze in another, or just hideous modern—no idea at all—in another, because the housewife's views of adjustment will change and so will the domicile. She will ultimately move into another home, and she will find that a Mission divan must be put in a Louis Quinze room, and then she will realize how hideous is the combination.

Bric-a-brac in the new home should be as scarce as hens' teeth, and this is true also of silver and china. The wedding presents will be enough to begin on, and additions may be made when actually necessary, and then only of the best quality and design.

Hang Draperies Straight.

The new curtain draperies should hang straight. It is no longer the fashion to loop things and trim them with tassels. They have proved to be harbingers of dust and germs, and we are all learning that cleanliness is next to good health, and we must make it easy to keep clean.

Chandeliers no longer shimmer in glass and gilt from the centre of the ceiling, but side lights and table lamps artistically shaded are the prevailing vogue. Shades, however, should be of glass, porcelain or paper, that they may be cleaned and renovated often. Only the very rich can afford silk and lace for every day use, as they are not easily cleaned, and, besides, they fade abominably. Artificial flowers on shades or on vases are not good form, neither are artificial palms. Use the real ones or none at all.

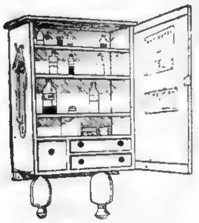
The gilt chair, the pedestal and statuette of doubtful quality, the mantel drape, the cosy corner, the easel and sofa pillows piled up against the mantels are out; and simple, strong furniture, choice bric-a-brac and an open vista of freshness and cleanliness and freedom from clutter are in.

Our new homemaker will have single or three-quarter beds in all of her bedrooms, two in one large room. These will be of brass or iron, and the dressing tables, chiffoniers and bedside tables will be protected with white embroidered linen covers, as well as the beds. A shirt waist box, which may have a back and thus form a seat, will be one of the belongings in her own room. This should be covered with straw cloth or chintz, and she should also have in her own room a dainty work table, or one of those small screens the inside of which is fitted with sewing materials, shelf and bag to hold her sewing work.

The home should bear evidence that its occupants have good taste, and it must be redolent of their individual characteristics if it would mean anything. A machine-made, made-to-order home shows that those who dwell therein are mediocre and commonplace.

It is to be hoped, however, that through all of these practical pathways she, and he, too, will not let the strain and stress of selecting a home take the romance out of it. Without great love and much sentiment the abiding place, no matter how palatial, will be only the house that shelters, not the home that should warm, comfort and protect. The home—the real home—represents security, happiness and hospitality.

WHAT YOU CAN DO TO IMPROVE YOUR KITCHEN. By May W. Mount.



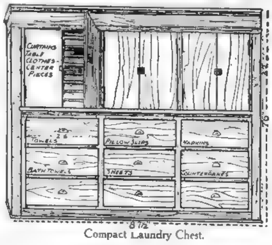
Home-Made Medicine Chest.

THE secret of health in the household in a very great measure lies in the kitchen, and a housekeeper has resting upon her a responsibility which she cannot too seriously consider.

The complaints which affect so many people would never exist if the kitchen were intelligently managed. There would be fewer hospitals and a stronger race of men if kitchens were looked after better than they are.

In the kitchen lie potentialities for good and evil which not one cook or housekeeper in any five thousand ever thinks about. To begin with, how many housekeepers see that their refrigerators are thoroughly washed and dried every day, and aired at frequent intervals? I have known housekeepers who thought themselves above reproach to allow [illegible] and canned and rotting [illegible] in the refrig[illegible] dishes of other [illegible] When the [illegible] bearing [illegible] smelling stuff until [illegible] the ash can where it [illegible] it had an opportunity to poison the other things in the refrigerator.

Sensible Kitchen Furniture.



Compact Laundry Chest.

Does it increase the moral obligation of a cook when she has a lesson such as this from her mistress?

Soda or borax should be used in washing a refrigerator, and it should be thoroughly rinsed and dried afterward.

Another important consideration lies in the handling of tinned vegetables and meats.

Most cooks and numbers of housekeepers allow meats and vegetables to remain in tins after these have been opened and portions of the contents used. When open, a chemical action sets in which often renders such remainders of meats and vegetables rank poison. If these left-over bits were placed in glass or china receptacles no harm would ensue.

Canned meats had better be eaten as soon as possible after they have been removed from their tins. They are apt to become bad after a few hours' keeping.

How to Serve Left-over Oysters.

People have been poisoned by eating tomatoes left in an open can and served up a day or two later.

People have died, and others have been made very ill, because some careless housekeeper thought it an economy to save over for a second serving raw oysters and clams. If a woman does not want to throw away left-over oysters and clams, she can boil them in a saucepan for just a minute after the juice has reached boiling point, and put them away in a cool place to be cooked up into an attractive dish next day.

Fish ought never to be kept over for a second serving. If the fish is very fresh and is put in a clean, cool place, it may be safe to serve it a second time, but how often this dish has caused more or less serious illnesses only doctors can tell.

Keep the kitchen absolutely clean. Don't put paper on the shelves to show a fancy border and allow dust and young water bugs and roaches to accumulate under it—as they inevitably will—and get mixed in with dishes for the table.

Flies, roaches, water bugs and mice abhor a clean kitchen. Shelves that are daily wiped off do more toward keeping a family healthy than a drug store full of medicine would.

Many people make coffee in tin or agate pots and do not thoroughly wash and dry these afterward. In the edges a poisonous matter gathers, which renders the liquid unhealthful and rusts the receptacles. China and earthenware are always better to use for making tea and coffee, for these, even if carelessly washed, cannot poison the liquid within them.

A certain well-known physician would not allow a piece of enamelled or agate ware to be used in his kitchen. In a good state of preservation he considered them far superior to tin or iron, but a careless cook could let bits of the enamel chip off upon the fire and these bits were capable of working incalculable harm to the stomach. A housekeeper should constantly and carefully examine her kitchenware to see that none of it is chipped or worn, and such a piece should be instantly thrown away.

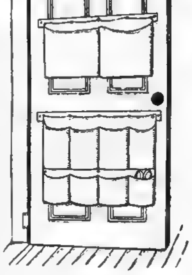
Wood and Tin Bad Receptacles.

Wise women are more and more using aluminum and earthenware to cook in. Such vessels are easily cleansed and the most careless and ignorant cook cannot do any harm to the family health through them.

It has become customary to use wooden and tin receptacles for flour, lard, butter and a host of such foodstuffs, and these are to be discouraged. Earthenware, china and glass jars are just as cheap and far more cleanly. Breakfast foods and things that come in pasteboard boxes and paper bags should always be emptied into a well closed jar. Pasteboard, wood and even tin, give a flavor to things allowed to remain in them for long and none of them are cleanly, the tin, merely because it is seldom washed and sunned, as it should be each time it becomes empty.

Many a woman will plead guilty to putting new butter in the jar, bucket or dish from which butter has been used, without first washing it. To do this is sure to injure the quality of the new butter, and will not improve the digestion of those who eat it. A thorough airing is necessary to all vessels used in a kitchen, for even the cleanest of them seem to get a moldy odor unless well aired.

A dangerous habit indulged in by women is to make gelatine and allow the dish to remain uncovered while it cools—and afterward, also. Now, doctors use gelatine to collect disease germs, because it can collect more disease germs to the square inch, and in a shorter space of time, than almost any other known substance. Some doctors will not have gelatine served on their tables. In spite of the known quantities of gelatine the average housekeeper cheerfully collects in it a goodly quantity of germs of all sorts and feeds them to her family. It is very little trouble to cover a dish of this with cheesecloth, or any thin material. All custards and liquid foods should be so covered when set to cool.



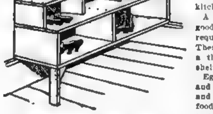
Pockets for the Closet Door.

People who have hot biscuits do not know that nearly all cooks grease their pans with lard, which gathers a certain amount of flour from the bottoms of the biscuits and melts into a thickened mass in the corners and edges of the pans. The cook gives the inside of the pan a flip with her dishcloth—it may or may not be clean—and sticks the pan in a cupboard or under the stove. She does not wash it for weeks, unless made to, and the coating of lard, flour and dust gathers in the corners of the pan and is wiped off, to a certain extent, by the biscuit in the morning.

Women should see that all their pans are well scoured and dried every day. A dollar or more may have to be added to the cook's wages to achieve this cleanliness, but a good many dollars will be saved in medical attention and drugs. In few cases will a cook be clean unless her mistress sees to it that she is.

Use Tact with the Servants.

Just here a word might be said about how to obtain cleanliness in a servant. The mistress who obtrusively nags her servant will lose her, but quiet and unobtrusive vigilance will attain great results.



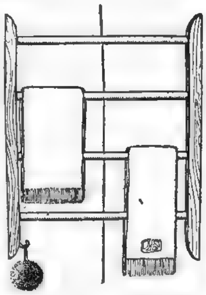
Double-Decked Shoe Nest.

In buying vegetables, get the freshest, and not the cheapest in the market. See that bad leaves are taken off and the vegetables placed in a cool, clean place until used. Then they should be well washed.

Even canned vegetables are improved by being washed before they are cooked. This is a safe precaution, because bits of lead and tin are to be found in some cans, and it isn't the best thing possible to swallow these.

Meat should always be kept in a cool, dry place. A roast or steak that is lightly but thoroughly scraped all over with the edge of a sharp knife will be much cleaner and much more tender than meat which has been washed. Meat should always be cleaned off before cooking, but washing does not achieve this end. It merely rubs in the matter to be removed, unless done with hot water, and that toughens the meat. As a matter of fact, meat is rarely ever either scraped or washed, and every housekeeper should see to it that this is done.

Kitchen shelves that have doors, even if the doors are of wood, instead of panes of glass, will prove much better than open shelves, because easier to keep clean and free from the pests which annoy most kitchens.



A Useful Towel Rack.

A set of shelves with wire doors is a good thing in which to keep articles that require a circulation of air about them. These may be in dishes or covered with a thin cloth and set in the wire netted shelves.

Eggs, for instance, should be kept thus and not in a refrigerator, so should ham and other salt meats, and certain cooked foods. Cheese should never be placed near any other edible—especially butter or milk—as it will quite ruin their flavor.

Each kitchen suggests its own sanitary arrangements, but a suggestion that applies to all is a well-scrubbed and scalded sink and thorough cleanliness everywhere else.

SOLEMNLY CRUCIFIED TO DEATH BY MISTAKE.

[illegible] on the cross overhead. A priest approached and repeated the words of St. Luke, "He saved others, let him save himself if he be Christ, the chosen of God." Some of the brothers, who took the part of Roman idolaters, then crowded up to the cross mocking and scoffing and shouting, "If thou be the King of the Jews, save thyself." Finally the inscription, written in Spanish, "This is the King of the Jews," was nailed on the cross, and then Mary and Martha and the women of Galilee (impersonated by women of the sect) approached.

This was the signal for lowering the cross—but the smiling lips of Gonzales were silent forever; the eyes upturned to the sky were rigid in death. The Penitentes looked at each other in startled surprise and said "God's will be done." The agony of the cross had been too much; the half hour they had intended to keep him there had stretched to nearly two hours, in a religious frenzy of lamentations the Penitentes carried the swollen, bleeding body of Gonzales to a tomb in the cemetery over the hill.

The county authorities have made efforts at an investigation of this Good Friday tragedy, but with little success. The Penitentes are Mexicans, speaking little but Spanish, and they refuse any information whatever. The Penitential Brothers, or "Los Hermanos Penitentes," have been cast out by the Roman Catholic Church and have been pursued by the local authorities in Colorado and New Mexico until they have been driven to remote mountain places where they could conduct their rites without interference.

The writer witnessed a part of the ceremonials of Easter time as performed by the Penitentes near Clayton, New Mexico, last year. Starting from Clayton, a small town on the Gulf road, we rode all day across the [illegible] dry prairies on which the [illegible] sign [illegible] a few herds of cattle, plenty [illegible] antelope and the shrill whistling curlew. We knew the danger of exciting the Brotherhood, but we determined to see, and photograph all we could of the ceremonies, and to that end had literally armed ourselves to the teeth—dressed like Mexicans to attract less attention, and hid the camera under the writer's coat. Ascending a hill we unexpectedly came upon the scene of action, and never can we forget the sight. It was late in the afternoon of a hot, clear day, not a breath of wind was stirring. Below us stretched a small valley whose side hills were scantily covered with a growth of scrub oak and pine. The little stone chapel was at the head of the valley; about five hundred feet away on a small knoll, representing the hill of Calvary, was erected a huge wooden cross.

Grouped about this, kneeling devoutly, were perhaps fifty people, and when they began to chant the "Miserere" in a melancholy wail the effect was wonderfully weird. When this ceased, the "Procession of Cross Bearers" left the chapel. Men chiefly take part in the actual ceremonies, though women are present. The crosses are large wooden affairs, and weigh over two hundred pounds each. Those doing penance frequently conceal their faces with black cloths, and the officers may be known by the fillets on their heads. The procession is headed by a piper. Then comes a brother walking backward and wearing a crucifix. He is followed by the comrades, who are naked, except for short cotton trousers, and these occasionally are lined with cacti, and bound tight to make the suffering the more intense. The reader of prayers is among their number. At short intervals they stop to make the "stations of the cross."

Arriving at Calvary, the cross bearers lie at full length with the heavy beams on their backs while the piper pipes and the others pray. Then the procession returns to the chapel, the men going inside for meditation, and the women remaining outside. These pilgrimages are kept up during the day and the climax of the tragedy occurs in the afternoon, when the chief enters the chapel and comes out with the victim, who is to impersonate Christ. In some places he is a volunteer, and in others he is chosen by lot. Calvary has been freshly prepared for him and he walks to the spot, lies at full length on the now recumbent cross, his back to the standard, and his arms outstretched.

The attendants take stout ropes and lash the arms and legs of the penitente to the cross, binding him so tightly that the strands actually sink into the flesh, but not a sound is heard from the martyr. It is customary to spike the victim to the cross, but public opinion has wrought a compromise in some localities and the actual driving of nails into the hands is omitted. Even in the very remote old Mexican towns, where an actual crucifixion always takes place, the victim of the crucifixion usually survives the ordeal, and proudly show the scars as evidence. Long ropes are fastened to the head of the cross to steady it, and other brothers raise it to an upright position. As its base meets the excavation the whole mass slips down with a thud that must cause excruciating pain to the victim, but he never utters a complaint. The cross is then maintained in its position by ropes and loose stones thrown into the hole.

The poor penitente must suffer the most intense agony—his skin puffs up and discolors and his face betrays great anguish. The silence was impressive—no sound of bird or insect in this desert land and all the brotherhood were in silent prayer. Some were lying on masses of cacti; all the officers wore crowns of thorns and some were beating themselves with the prickly Spanish bayonet plant. It seemed as if we could not endure the strain. About half an hour after the cross was raised the chief gave the order to lower it. The bonds were loosed and the blood began to freely circulate in the victim's veins, but the pseudo Christ was limp and unconscious.

Then following the testamental story, a few women gather about the cross, wailing dismally and impersonating Mary and Martha. The body is wrapped in a cloth and borne to a cave in the foothills. The general crowd returns to town to a lively tune from the piper, but a chosen few remain to apply restoratives and resurrect the erstwhile Christ. If no mishap has occurred the honored one quickly recovers and by evening will strut about the town, the most important one of the inhabitants. Then follows a religious dance and a feast, and the community settles down to a semi-civilized life once more. The procession of flagellants we did not witness, having arrived too late, but they march over cacti and prickly pear with their bare feet and wear nothing but short cotton breeches. They [illegible] their backs with thorns and the blood trickles down in streams.

How to Keep Your Summer Gas Bill Down

A FEW little hints will help wonderfully to keep the gas bills down this Summer. When you put your gas range into commission very few cooks appreciate how much gas they waste and how easy it is to be economical with the range.

See that the food is entirely ready for cooking before lighting the flame.

When a dish is cooked enough turn out the flame if you are not yet ready with the rest of the meal. It can be reheated in a moment.

The metal retains heat for some little time after the lights are out. Consequently you can save gas by turning off the flame a few minutes before the dish is done.

A pot can do no more than boil. After that process has been started, the lowered flame will keep it going quite as well and often better than the full flame.

Use a big flame to start soups, sauces, stews and vegetables. Then turn it low.

Keep your stove burners clean. If you note that the flame burns blue and there with a small spark it is a sign that the gas outlet is clogged.

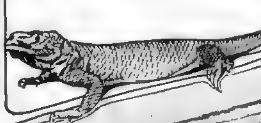
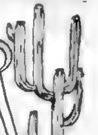
HOW MAN TRIFLED WITH NATURE; AND HOW NATURE "GOT EVEN"

The Colorado River Now Tearing Its Way Down Through the Irrigating Canal and Flooding the Ranches and Cities in the Old Salton Basin, and Making a Great Inland Sea Again, as It Was Countless Ages Ago.

THE CANAL THROUGH THE DESERT.

HORSES CAUGHT IN THE FLOOD.





THE MAIN CANAL THAT IS NOW A RAGING TORRENT.

THE WATER THAT IS OVERFLOWING THE DESERT.

Yuma, Ariz., June 12.

A GREAT scheme was born in the heads of some California capitalists—they would irrigate the great desert in Southern California. Here the land lies about seventy feet below the level of the sea. They would tap the Colorado river and lead its waters through canals into the low-lying Colorado desert. They would then beckon to settlers to come and take up land and buy their water from the canal company.

To dodge the laws and restrictions of the United States Government the canal promoters conceived an ingenious scheme. They would tap the Colorado river after it had reached Mexican territory and lead the waters back into United States soil. The Government very properly exercises supervision over rivers, but not over the little ditches and canals dug by man.

So by waiting until the waters of the Colorado had passed into Mexico and then seizing them and turning them into its canal the irrigation company were able to enter the United States with its water confined to the bounds of a private canal. This was an important point and was promptly used by the company to frighten and threaten the settlers by pointing out that it was beyond the control of the laws and could charge exhorbitant prices for the water.

But now comes the joke on the greedy capitalists. Nature herself has punished them. Nature sat by passively and allowed the noble Colorado to be tapped, and its waters crept gently through the canals. When all the ditches had been dug and the irrigation company had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on its improvements, an unexpected thing happened. Almost as if by Divine retribution the Colorado River suddenly turned its terrific current into the canal. Inch by inch and foot by foot it ate away the banks and burrowed out the bottom of the canal. Before they realized what was taking place a river was rushing through their canal bed and pouring its waters in an unwelcome torrent into the desert. As the entire section is seventy feet below the ocean level there is no way to drain off the flood. This is called the Salton basin and once in earlier ages it was a vast inland sea. Now, by the careless meddling of man, the sea has come into its own again. There is no outlet for the water; day by day the sea is growing.

Where the ichthyosauri and plethyosauri and other little and big sauri disported several kalpas ago, the waves again break on the ancient beaches, and that stranded Spanish galleon of the desert which was last spoken by Joaquin Miller may come drifting to port again if it is not crumbled dust.

The Salton Sea is now within 200 feet of the Southern Pacific tracks and is steadily rising day by day. Beachcombers down that way say that one can now sail from Salton to very near Imperial. Men who have lived there under the lure of the desert for years are becoming restless. They find it is becoming too salubrious, the climate is changing and is as balmy and mild as that of Los Angeles.

Last Winter's rains have also transformed the portion of the desert not seized by the sea, for it is a garden of lustrous sweet scented wild flowers. A fleet of cat boats affords amusement to the few white men at Salton, and the Indians gaze out over the new ocean and croon their old legends about the end of the world approaching.

The channel of the canal where it receives the waters of the Colorado is now more than a hundred feet wide and fifteen feet deep, with a current swifter than that of the regular channel, and it is growing wider and deeper every day.

Should the main stream change to this channel it would no longer be an irrigating canal, but a river in which the company could have no ownership, and eventually fill up the basin and destroy the farms, those near Coachella and Indio, as well as those around Imperial and Calexico.

The California Development Company, owning the canal now, feels itself in the condition of the man who set a trap and afterwards thoughtlessly stepped in it himself, and is striving to find means of undoing the mischief. Proposals have been made to the various water companies of the districts into which the valley is divided that the California Development Company surrender all stock which it owns in these water companies on condition that they raise the sum of $400,000 to be paid to the California Development Company to be used by it in building a head gate, dykes and dams and doing other work for the completion and improvement of the great canal. These negotiations have been under way for some days, but have not yet been completed.

The dangerous situation at the heading will not admit longer delay, and preparations are being made to begin the work of building a dam across the additional intakes, leaving only the channel through the head gate. A great number of bags to be filled with sand have been purchased, a pile driving outfit has been bought and a large quantity of piling and other timber ordered, a part of which has already arrived at Yuma. The steamer Cuchan has been chartered and will take the material and machinery to the heading as soon as all of the lumber arrives.

The Colorado River has developed a tendency to break into the canal at other points, and it is doubted by many engineers whether the flood can ever be stopped.

If the flood continues, the canal company will be hopelessly ruined, and along with its lost investment will go the homes and ranches of the settlers. Already hundreds of acres of land are under water and orange groves, date orchards, prunes, olives, lemons and figs are destroyed.

In four years a marvellous change has come over the face of this great desert waste. With the opening of the irrigation system have sprung up cities with their schools, churches, electric roads and banks.

The Colorado delta or Colorado desert only a few years ago was a waste of hot white sand, over which few people had crossed. It was as hot and waterless as Sahara. Not a living thing grew on its expanse but the worthless spiny cactus, which has a faculty of existing where there is no moisture. Here and there were a few spots where a colony of lizards, rattlesnakes, and prairie dogs managed to make a living.

Four years ago in the sizzling Imperial Valley the town of Imperial was laid out in the sand. In laying it out the surveyors carried the water a distance of four miles. Then followed the canal which brought back the waters of the Colorado. As the water gently forced its way into the desert, a carpet of vegetation, such as the astronomers report on the planet Mars, spread out in all directions. Every crop that was planted flourished wonderfully, and strange things grew up that were never planted and were unknown to the pioneers. To-day the town of Imperial has over seven hundred inhabitants and is laid out in what the West may well call elegance.

A first-class hotel, with private baths, is only one of its boasts. Outside the city maize corn, wheat and barley are growing two crops to the year. All kinds of fruit ripen three weeks earlier than in the coast valleys of Southern California, thus giving a tremendous start on the fruit market. Grapes and the date palm were soon found to bear better here than at any spot on the continent.

The towns of Brawley, Heber, Silsbee and Calexico developed in the same way. Newspapers, electric car lines, graineries and all sorts of business enterprises sprang up on each other's heels [illegible] the ramifications of the canals carried life-giving water everywhere.

Even [illegible] plantations were tried with success, though this plant requires an amount of water not usually found except where water is more abundant than desired for other purposes.

Way out in the still parched places of the desert out of sight of the canals and vegetation, men were toiling preparing great plantations and ranches to be ready for the water which the water company had contracted to bring them later on. An army of men was constantly at work on the canals. And the water company held the life of the whole area in its hands.

Now the flood has come, hundreds of acres of cultivated ranches are under water and ruined. The work on the canals is stopped because the water has jumped all bounds and is going wherever it pleases, irrespective of contracts.

The overflow is probably destined to be a blessing to the community even if the company is never able to stop it. The new lake, though it has ruined the men whose property is beneath it, will make the climate moister and assure cheaper irrigation for all time.

A Few Kind Words for the Onion.

GENEOLOGY ought to count for something, even in the case of the pungent onion, for he is a second cousin to the lily. Once upon a time they grew from the same seed and had neither beauty nor odor. Their separation, doubtless, was due to a disagreement as to which of these qualities was most to be desired, and each by independent evolution has met with much success.

The much despised onion has far outstripped his haughty relative in the matter of usefulness. If you eat fried onions for breakfast, onion sandwiches or onion salad for luncheon, and onion soup for dinner, you are guaranteed never to have a cold in the head. Evidently there are those who prefer a cold in the head.

Without onions in soups, salads and entrees, what should we do? asks a writer in Table Talk. The mild Spanish onions make a salad that many can eat who are not able to eat the coarser kinds of onions raw. They should be sliced, and placed in ice water for several hours, and the water changed once or twice. Then have them served with French dressing.

Potato salad can be made without the objectionable raw onion by cooking an onion with the potatoes for the salad. Some take pickled onions or the vinegar from the bottle for potato salad because they dislike the raw onion or find it indigestible.

The Pennsylvania German method of serving onions and cucumbers sliced together is to use a dressing of sour cream and vinegar with salt and pepper. The vinegar is beaten into a larger bulk of cream until the mixture is frothy, then it is turned over the prepared onions and cucumbers.

Lyonnaise potatoes are delicious, yet it is quite uncommon to get them cooked properly, "fried white" and not brown, yet done through and red hot. Sweet potatoes may be prepared in the same manner with onions, and fried apples may have a small admixture of onions when wanted for an appetizing Winter dish. Onions may be stuffed with sausage meat and baked. Pickled onions are nice for picnics and travellers' lunch baskets. Choose always the best brands of the smallest onions.

No Frenchman could live without garlic, chives or leeks. He uses the leeks for soups or sometimes boiled for a vegetable; the tender green chives he uses for salads, or rubs the bowl with garlic, or gives the garlic flavor by tossing a chapon of bread, which has been made strong with garlic, into the salad.

The Spaniards make "gaspacho," a dish of bread and vegetables strong with onion, and serve it cold. The Russians and Irish are fond of onions, but the Germanic peoples care far less for them.

Exclude onions if you will, but the onion pattern you are sure to cherish on your blue and white dishes, and often the same design is copied in embroidery for a centrepiece for the luncheon table. Hence you may receive it in this form, and cannot then disdain the lowly onion, when art approves of it.

AN OLIVE GROVE BESIDE THE CANAL IN THE DESERT.

Queer Habits of the American Ostrich.

FEW people know that ostrich farming is carried on profitably and on a large scale in the United States. The queer antics and habits of this strangest and biggest of birds are well worth a visit to the ostrich farms of which there are many in southern California and a few elsewhere, as in Phoenix, Arizona.

One farm near Los Angeles has 2,000 of the birds. The chief duty of the keepers is to have the creatures in a happy frame of mind. As long as they succeed in this everything goes well and each Spring there is a fine crop of plumes. The ostrich when discontented shows it by kicking, and his kicks are the dread of the keepers. An ostrich's kick is as powerful as that of a mule and much better aimed and more sudden. Professor Shillings, the famous photographer of wild animals, says he has seen an ostrich kick a lion into complete submission. The big bird's legs, however, are as delicate as a pugilist's hands and whenever a kick does not land quite true the ostrich ends his career with a broken leg.

The farms are spread over many acres. Each bird has his own territory bounded by imaginary lines which nobody but the ostrich himself can see. If any bird or any [illegible] but the accredited keeper crosses this line the kicking begins.

It requires three or four days of coaxing, enticing and frightening to collect the birds for the Spring plucking. They are finally crowded into an enclosure so tightly that there is no room to kick. [illegible] there they are taken to the [illegible] which is also too narrow to permit kicking and then the best plumes are plucked.

[illegible] are greedily eaten. They require the phosphate the bones contain. Should a too large bone stick in the neck it is a simple matter to cut it out and sew the place up again. The wound, as a rule, heals quickly and causes but little inconvenience.

Ostriches are mostly fed on meal and alfalfa. They will swallow almost anything small enough to pass down the neck, such as oranges, small fowls, tortoises, turkey chickens and kittens.

One of the owners of a ranch found an ostrich in his dining room helping [illegible] after another, to the contents of a box of luscious peaches. He also spoke of a tennis ball being sent beyond the tennis ground close to an ostrich, who at once swallowed it with an evident relish, bringing the game to a sudden end. They will swallow yards of fencing wire in short pieces.

Ostriches practically have no brain at all. In their craws is always found a large quantity of smooth stones, many of them brightly colored. They are attracted by everything bright and glittering. One of the ostriches on a ranch here secured a beautiful diamond pin of a visitor, which the sharp eye of the bird spied as the gentleman leaned over the fence into the camp

SUNDAY AMERICAN-JOURNAL-EXAMINER-PATTERNS

A JAUNTY, exclusive Eton coat suit and a charming separate waist are offered to-day in the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner pattern series. The Eton suits are so popular this season that only the chill winds of November will end their reign. Nor does one need to be an experienced dressmaker to make one with success. If a little care be used, the coat will look quite as well as if made by an expensive modiste—assuming, of course, that a good style model is chosen. For a medium size the suit requires 9 yards of material 36 inches wide. The pattern for the coat, No. 164—2806, is in four sizes, 30 to 42 bust. The skirt, No. 165—2707, is in seven sizes, 20 to 32 inches waist.

Designs in pretty separate waists are always welcomed by the woman with deft fingers, and whether she be experienced or not the blouse shown may be easily realized in a fetching waist for her morning or afternoon adornment. The model requires 4⅛ yards of material 36 inches wide. This pattern, No. 166—2818, is in five sizes, 32 to 40 inches bust.

Fill in this blank, being careful to state the numbers of the patterns desired and measure, and mail with 10 cents for each pattern in money or stamps, or 30 cents for all three, to

Take a Cheerful View of Life

A sour, pessimistic man is the poorest sample of his tribe. While we are here let us make ourselves and others hopeful as we can.

THERE are too many grumpy faces in America.

Too many of us look at life through Gloom spectacles and try to make others do the same.

The purpose of this editorial is to interest readers in the possibility of making other people happier BY SEEMING AND BEING HAPPIER THEMSELVES.

We make our troubles worse by thinking how bad they are.

We make them lighter by thinking that they won't last long; that only courage and determination are required to put an end to them.

One trouble with the American citizen is his work und a high pressure.

He tries hard while he is at it. Then comes his reaction, which is usually the form of dejected spirits and pessimistic forebodings. Many families are made miserable by the morose manner of the heads of families—worrying uselessly about the future or chronicly gloomy about the present

Nowhere in the world will you see so many gloomy, preoccupied faces as in this country. That is a sign of intensity, of hard striving for success. But it is also a sign of nervous wear and tear, of early breakdown.

Remember that cheerfulness OF ITSELF is a valuable asset. If a doctor looks at his patient and finds a wrinkled, nervous man, a man of constant frowns and constant irritation, he knows that the task of effecting a cure will be harder than with a cheerful person. Irritability poisons the system. There is no doubt that Christian Scientists—working without the slightest knowledge of science in the real sense of the word—DO EFFECT MANY CURES.

There are many doctors that send certain nervous, pessimistic cases to the Christian Science practitioners—and that without having any faith whatever in the usual claims of Christian Science. Christian Science begins by teaching cheerfulness—an exaggerated and unreasoning form of it, perhaps, but still cheerfulness. It can be said for Christian Scientists, as for few others, that they are a cheerful and a smiling people. They push away their troubles or deny them. In their own amusing phraseology, they say that the things unpleasant "never happened."

We do not recommend that style of settling life problems. But we do recommend the habit of refusing to take as final the unpleasant side of life.

⁂

A man READS just enough to know how big humanity's problems are. He THINKS just enough to realize how feeble is the mind of man in proportion to the work before it.

He draws gloomy conclusions for the race, finds life not worth while—declares sometimes that the world must be governed by an evil spirit—and wherever he goes he spreads gloom around him. He is a human being less admirable than the plantation darky, singing at his work, smiling over a poor dinner, and genuinely happy over the welcome home of a little darky baby that cannot possibly be President.

Life IS a big problem, and the achievement even of moderate happiness is NOT easy

But shall we make things any better by groaning and frowning as we go along?

Consider the little coral insects that have produced the big islands in the southern waters. Those little creatures at their work below the surface set us a pretty good example in a dull, quiet way.

Think of the task which they undertake—perhaps without knowing it. For centuries they work, lifting the wall of coral slowly from the bed of the sea toward the sunlit surface. Each little hole in the coral is the tomb of one worker. Not one of them ever lives to see a change. But they work and plod along. The work is done, the island is made at last, the soil is formed, the birds bring the seeds, the palms grow, human beings appear—and the little submarine creatures have done their work well.

So it will be with us. We are a sort of coral insect, gradually creating a real civilization, raising it slowly from the depths of ignorance, savagery, poverty and selfishness. It is a long work and a hard work.

BUT WE MIGHT AS WELL BE CHEERFUL ABOUT IT and enjoy the work, instead of making it worse with growling.

MAKE yourself be cheerful (YOU CAN IF YOU WILL), and you will benefit yourself and others.

There is no greater handicap to success than a gloomy face and a pessimistic disposition. Many a man has made his way quickly simply because men LIKE to see a happy face, and they are glad to help one that faces life pluckily and cheerfully.

The kind of man picked out by a Morgan or a Rockefeller for hard and important work is THE CHEERFUL MAN.

If you see Morgan, Rockefeller, Harriman, you will see types of the gloomy, pessimistic man. For money does not make them happy, and with no one to control them they indulge their tendency to gloom. But the MEN THAT THEY PICK OUT AS GOOD WORKERS ARE CHEERFUL.

Morgan's young partners and Rockefeller's young partners are men who actually MAKE IT A BUSINESS TO BE CHEERFUL.

They know from study of life that there is a cash value to the cheerful side, that the man who is always ready and finds nothing very hard will be always in demand.

There is another more important side to cheerfulness, and that is its effect upon others. The man who goes home every night with a face irritated and cross is simply ruining the lives of those about him. And, besides, he is often playing the part of a bully and a coward. He inflicts his bad humor on those that can not defend themselves or injure him.

Everything in this life depends on how we FEEL not upon what we HAVE. If every one of us would fight the disposition to growl and look on the dark side, we should advance enormously. If it did any good to be gloomy, this would not be written. But no matter how hard your life or your work is—a sour nature will only make it harder, and a pleasant disposition will help at once to better your conditions

In any fight you can easily tell which man is winning.

He may be badly battered, perhaps with a black eye and other troubles—but he has a pleasant look through it all, and you can see that he is winning.

The gloomy man, full of gloomy predictions, LOOKS like the losing one, and he IS that, usually. The moment you begin to look "Down on your luck," the world changes its estimate of you—you are considered a failure by your own confession. The world's pessimists are ruining their own chances of advancement, while making life gloomy for those around them.

One of the world's brave men was Robert Louis Stevenson, the admirable writer. That man was really brave, for he was cheerful, worked hard and turned a smiling face to the world—even while he was dying He had success, enjoyed his work, everything in life was his—yet he was dying of consumption and he knew it.

Surely there was a man with reason to complain. He knew the world NEEDED him and his work. He knew that his existence was a blessing and a pleasure to his fellow man. And he knew that within a very short time he must go prematurely to the grave. In spite of this, Stevenson was one of the most cheerful of men. He wrote his own beautiful epitaph carved on the stone on the South Sea island hill that he chose for his burial place.

He lived a brave man, doing his best and smiling in the face of a very cruel fate, and he died a brave, hopeful and smiling man. We recommend to you a prayer by Robert Louis Stevenson. Cut it out when you throw away the rest of this newspaper—read it over once in a while:

"The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties.

"Help us to play the man, help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces; let cheerfulness abound with industry.

"Give us strength to go blithely on our business all this day, bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored and grant us in the end the gift of sleep. Amen."

The Wonder World of Art

By
Ella Wheeler Wilcox

EARLY in my life, far out on a prairie in Wisconsin, I dreamed a dream of what the WORLD OF ART must be like.

I lived among people who ploughed the ground, sowed the seed, hoed and harrowed the earth, and threshed and garnered the harvests; people who bred and sold horses and cattle and sheep, and I heard much sordid and worrisome talk about crops and blights and droughts and distempers among the animals, and it all seemed to me so unlike what the wonderful WORLD OF ART must be, that WORLD for which I longed as soon as I could think.

I had never seen an ARTIST of any description. An editor of a country newspaper and a sweet woman named Helen Manville, who wrote lovely verses (and whose daughter Marion Manville Pope, has since attained distinction as a writer) were the only literary people I had met. Helen Manville lived at La Crosse, Wis., which seemed a more mysterious metropolis to me then than London does to-day, and she came down from that great and far away town to visit me (a journey of several hours) in my little country home, because she had become interested in some verses I wrote on my tenth birthday, and a correspondence had ensued. She was lovely to look upon and very sweet in nature, and this, together with the courteous manner and kind words of the editor of the Madison Journal, gave me a very high ideal of people who belonged in the "WONDER WORLD OF ART."

So I dreamed more and more about that WORLD, wherein I felt sure I would some day journey to my heart's content, and when I heard silly gossip among the people I knew and tittle-tattle and backbiting and saw evidences of envy and jealousy over the small achievements and poor little triumphs of some neighbor, I comforted myself with the thought of that Future Time when I should dwell among the loftier beings in a different sphere—a realm wherein was only aspiration, inspiration, congenial toil and beautiful helpful appreciation—where each member of that WORLD gave every other the same sweet encouragement and sympathy which dear Helen Manville and the editor of the Madison Journal had given me.

And one day I wrote out my dream of that Realm as a preface to a little volume I was publishing.

The verses are given here.

I came across it recently, and oddly enough just after hearing the story of the persecutions and plots, from which Ernest Biondi, the creator of the wonderful "SATURNALIA," and Leon and T Scott Dabo, those two wonderful geniuses, had been subjected by BROTHER artists—men who belong in that WONDER WORLD OF ART, of which I dreamed so long on the Wisconsin prairie, and looked at the gorgeous sunset and wrote my verses, and imagined what New York and Boston must be like.

I have lived in New York for the last twenty years, and I have found it far more wonderful and beautiful in a thousand ways than I ever dreamed. The happiest years of my life have been these twenty, and rare and royal friendships and ties which will last through eternity have been formed there.

I have met and known hundreds of ARTISTS in my WONDER LAND OF ART, artists who express themselves through music, painting, sculpture and literature—great souls and small souls, great geniuses and pot-boiling artisans, royal princes of the court and poor pretenders. But, alas.

I have been, [illegible] in the realm as on the country farm, gossip and tattle, and unkind criticism (UNKIND, REMEMBER, FOR KIND CRITICISM IS BETTER THAN CONTINUAL PRAISE) and bitter backbiting. I have seen the face of one artist, author, musician or painter, grow black with envy at the knowledge of another's triumph, and I have seen cruel falsehoods, gliding like serpents in the grass, under nom de plumes and aliases, which one man or woman of this world wrote to wound another, under the guise of CRITICISM.

I have known of attempted boycotts, planned by men of unquestioned talent to keep another gifted man from reaping the rewards of his labor, and I have heard of struggling artists driven to madness and one to suicide, and others to years of despondency by the machinations of rivals, envious of his genius.

Oh, the pity and the shame and the sorrow of it all! And, alas, for my early dream of a "WONDER LAND OF ART!"

And yet the dream is NOT a mere dream.

Where of old I imagined ALL who entered that world were free from belittling jealousies, and made immortal by GENIUS, I have found ENOUGH of these great gifted souls to know my world exists.

My voice can linger with loving and respectful cadences on the names of a score of dear gifted men and women, personally known to me for years, and viewed under the magnifying glass of FRIENDSHIP, who are as broad as GOD'S universe in their judgments and sympathies, and as free from mean envyings as the sunshine is free from ink. Some of them have names known the world over—some are only beginners in the field of endeavor, some of them have only talent, and others have been stamped with the divine seal of genius.

Of such as these—God bless them—I once dreamed the whole WONDER WORLD OF ART was peopled; that all who had crossed that border land were "The genius-crowned aristocrats of earth" and incapable of "profane or senseless gossip jealousies and contemptible envyings.

And this was but a diagram of that world, as it should be.

Each gifted soul should feel the obligation of nobility.

It should feel the largeness of this "WONDER WORLD OF ART" and realize the immense amount of ROOM there is in it for every new comer.

No two minds ever thought, or spoke, or worked, in just the same way.

Though everything has been said by HOMER, yet SHAKESPEARE found new methods of expression, and it is true of every department of art, and will be true for centuries to come.

No gifted man or woman ever yet crowded another in this world, any more than birds in a vast forest crown one another, or one star in the heavens interferes with another. Always is there a tree top waiting for the new fledgling whose wings are strong enough to attain it.

Always is there the waiting vacancy in the azure for the NEW STAR, which crowds no other star. The light it gives robs no other, but adds more lustre to the adjacent planets.

Each human being who SUCCEEDS in any line of art helps swell the great sea of success, and no other human being is wronged thereby. Indeed, new encouragement and strength are given to all others by every individual success.

If you have a cherished ambition to become an artist in any line of expression, MAKE YOURSELF WORTHY FIRST OF ALL.

If you believe God's divine TOUCH has bestowed genius or talent upon you, believe also that He has provided ROOM for you in the universe without your pushing or jostling others who seek the same highway. Believe, too, that by helping all others who pass along your road, you are helping yourself to higher achievements.

Success is not a single life preserver in an ocean, at which all must clutch or go down, as many seem to think; it is rather a great and noble port, where innumerable ships may find harbor, and the winds of heaven are free to ALL boats on that sea, and each mariner who knows how to manage his sails may gain the port without becoming a pirate, or cutting the throats of other voyagers.

And remember this. If you desire to do great and lasting work in any field of art, BE GREAT YOURSELF, for what YOU ARE and WHAT YOU THINK will leave its indelible impress upon what you DO, and by that you shall in the long run be known.

Every selfish envious and jealous emotion you foster in your mind is marring your art, every generous act and word and impulse you encourage is increasing your chances of large results, because it is making YOURSELF larger.

Meanwhile, you, who are suffering from injustice and jealousy, as Biondi and Dabo, and others have suffered at the hands of jealous rivals, do not despair.

T. Scott Dabo has "ARRIVED," in spite of all, and Paris is against—all opposition.

As surely as "THE LAOCOON" has its undisturbed place in the world of art, so will "THE SATURNALIA."

If you are gifted with real GENIUS; if your ideals are honest and true; if your motives are pure, and you DO NOT WASTE YOUR VITALITY IN DESPAIR OR REVENGE, so surely shall you, too, "ARRIVE."

The way may be long and hard, but the goal is sure if you will remember that the DIVINE SOUL OF YOU is greater than any combination of devilish rivals bent on your defeat. Nothing can defeat you but your [illegible]

Remember, too, that however base is the sentiment of jealousy and envy in the world of trade, business or finance, that it takes on tenfold more hideous hues when found in the WORLD OF ART, that world was [illegible] be heard

THE BORDERLAND

By Ella Wheeler (Wilcox)

I STEP across the mystic borderland
And look upon the wonder-world of Art—
How beautiful, how beautiful its hills!
And all its valleys, how surprising fair!

THE winding paths that lead up to the heights
Are polished by the footsteps of the great;
The mountain peaks stand very near to God;
The chosen few whose feet thereon have trod
Have talked with Him and with the angels walked.

HERE are no sounds of discord, no profane
Or senseless gossip of unworthy things;
Only the songs of chisels and of pens,
Of busy brushes, and ecstatic strains
Of souls surcharged with music most divine.
Here is no idle sorrow, no poor grief
For any day or object left behind,
For time is counted precious; and herein
Is such complete abandonment of Self
That tears turn into rainbows, and enhance
The beauty of the land where all is fair.

AWED and afraid, I cross the borderland.
Oh, who am I, that I dare enter here
Where the great artists of the world have trod,
The genius crowned aristocrats of Earth?
Only the singer of a little song;
Yet loving Art with such a mighty love
I hold it greater to have won a place
Just on the fair land's edge to make my grave,
Than in the outer world of greed and gain

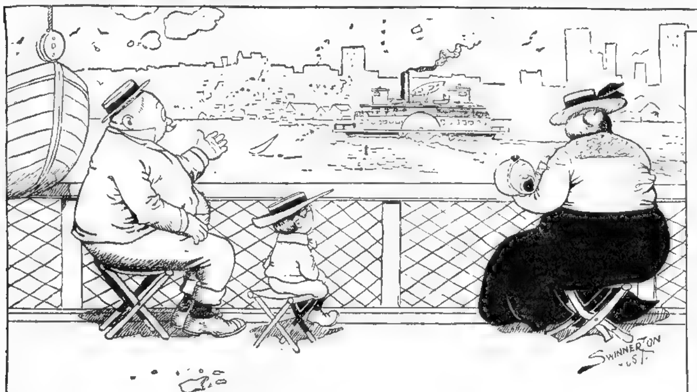
Little Bobbie on the Hudson

By
William F. Kirk



And when we got closer it sed on the ship the Ferry Philadelphia.

LAST Saturday i took a steemer & started up the Hudson river, thare was many others started too, thare was a big crowd. i dident know anything about the seenery, so i sat down neer a fat man who was very kind to me & toald me everything that is one nice thing about New York. everybody tells you about things & nobody tells you the saim thing.

the fat man pointed at a big ship in the harbor and he sed that is the battleship Texas, she has jest returned from forren ports, & when we get closer it sed on the ship The Ferry Philadelphia, & the man looked cheep but kept on talking. Pritty soon he pointed to a town & sed that is Newburg, that is whare they manufacture those lobsters. Pritty soon we caim to West Point, and he sed if it was a cleer day we could see the tomb of Washington. & i sed it wud have to be a pritty cleer day to look that far & he sed Not at all, it is jest over that hill.

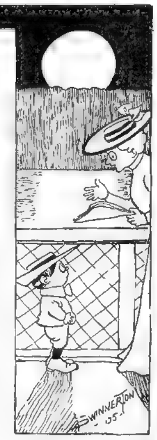
then thare was a baby began to cry neer us, so i cudent heer any moar the man sed, & you bet i was much obliged to the baby. The babys mother was a big fat woman, & the drops of perspirashun was dripping off of her brow into the babys mouth & eyes, then i sed Let me hold this parasol for you & she sed Thank you & I held it under her hed & over the babys face. i believe in beeing kind to the young.

Well, after a while we caim to Poughkeepsie. i learned to spell that word in school. i got off thare & thought i wud try to see the town, so i was walking along the street & i met a vary pritty gurl, i sed Can you tell me what street this is & she sed No, I am a Vasser girl & doant bother lerning the naims of streats. i asked her if she knew whare thare was a nise resterent, & she sed No, but I know that Gaul is divided in 3 parts. I sed That doant git me anything to eet, & she sed History relates that the grate Sockratees went without luncheon many a day. What hotel is that beeyond that hill? I asked her, & she sed I cannot say, but I know that beeyond the Alps lies Italy. That was all i cud find out from her. if i had a sister I wud send her to nite school befoar i wud let her go to Vasser. When i wanted to talk to her sum moar she repeeted Gaul is divided in 3 parts & you have all 3 parts, you are too fresh, then she left me standing thare alone.

cumming back down the river that nite i sat neer the rail & looked up at the stars, thare was a lady on board that i knew, she rites poetry & she resited to me all the way hoam. Doant you think it is divine, she asked me, to watch the silver moon glansing its rays off the tips of the waivs? Then she sed

We drift adawn the stream, my luv & me,
& hear our hart throbs going 1, 2, 3

She sed Wud you beleeve that I rote that myself? & i sed No, it sounds like Rhymo the Monk. Beesides, i toald her, i aint yure luv. I am too yung to git married & listen to that kind of poetry all the rest of my life. then we parted like ships that pass in the nite. Such is life on the hudson.



She resited to me all the way hoam

Mirandy on Women Proposing

By Dorothy Dix

"A woman sholy is lackin' in probusness ef she has ter pop de question herself."

Copyright, 1905, by American Journal Examiner

"WHUT'S all dis foolishness dat folks is writing in de papers about wedder women should propose or not?" asked Mirandy.

"My land, but a woman sholy is lacking in probusness ef she has to pop de question herself. Any woman whut can't tole a man on to de pint whar he up an' axes her, ain't got enough sense to lead a blind goose to water. She sert'ny is a slack woman an' she's got so little gumption dat she might jes as well been bawn a man to start wid.

"I aint' sputin' but whut men is mighty smart. Dey sholy do know a lot about building houses, an' bridges, an' findin' de place whar de furriners lives, but when it comes to LOVE, men is jest plum idjits. Dey don't know nothin'. Dey ain't never cut deir wisdom teeth, an' dey is jest so easy dat a gal baby can handle um.

"Yassum, deres lebenty-leven ways to make a man propose, an' ev'y one of um wuks. Dey sholy does, caze here's all of we all married women to prove it.

"Close women lays mighty low 'bout dis, an' gives it out dat de man dey's tied up wid jes' chased 'em into the yerth, an' dat dey had to marry to git rid of him, but you better believe dat we wouldn't have no call to shake our feet at many more weddin's ef it was left jes' to de man to pop de question. Yassum, every man dats safe in de matrimonal fold has been helped over de fence by a woman.

"D'ye ever notice de curis way a man acts when he proposes? He's so surprised dat he most swallows his Adams Apple, an' his eyes pop out lak a rabbit's in de brush pile.

"You see, when a man starts to galavantin' around wid a woman he ain't got no idea of marrying. He jes' wants to have a good time, an' he goes projeckin' along, feeling jes' as safe as if he had took out his insurance papers, an' den some day, fus' news he knows, he hears himself a axen her ef she will let him wuk an' support her de balance of her life.

"An' he don't know how it all come about, but de woman does.

"Cose you have to use different ways wid different men, for men is mighty lak mules—dey's powerful apt to bak befo' de matrimonal fence, an' some of um has to be coaxed an' some of um driven an' some of um has to be skeered befo' you can git um to take de jump over it.

"Now dere was Bill Jones whut kept a hangin' around Elvira Simmons ontil he wore out de rockin' cheers an' mos' et her folks into de poorhouse. Bill was one of dese here biggity men dat was so stuck on himself dat he thought folks ought to be willing to pay out money jes' to git to look at him. but, Lawd, he didn't have no more idee of marryin' dan nuthin'.

"But Elvira, she did, so whut does she up an' do? When Bill was a startin' home one night she busted into tears. 'Whut is you crying fur?' said Bill. 'I'm er cryin',' 'spon's Elvira, becaze youse a going away, an' I won't git to see you ontil to-morrow.'

"An' dat fotched Bill, becaze he felt so sorry fer anybody dat had to be deprived of his society dat befo' he knowed it, he was a telling her he never would leave her no mo'.

"An 'dare was Tom Jenkins dat was one of dese here bashful men, whut gits right ash-colored when dey looks at a woman, an' loses dey voice when dey goes to address her. How you reckon Lucindy Ann got him spunked up enough to pop de question? Ev'y time he speaks, she answers 'yes' an' at last she hit de right time.

"Den dare was Mary Jane Jones whut skeered Sam Smith into poppin' de question by totin' around a letter she wrote herself an' dat she made him believe was from some man way off somewhar dat was just a hoanin' an' a pinin' to marry her.

"I ain't telling how I led Ike up to de proposin' point, caze Ike thinks dat it was all along of me faintin' and fallin' in his arms becaze I was so skeered of a snake dat we come across when we wuz a takin' a stroll an' dat by de time I come to, he done told me dat he loved me, an' ax me to marry him.

"Ike say dat but for de accident of dat snake we might never have gotten married, an' I ain't argify wid him, but I specs I knows who put dat dead garter snake in de path.

"Nawm, I ain't got no 'pinion of a woman whut has to pop de question to a man. She sho' do need a guardeen.

"Cose it does look lak dat, considerin' dat women is about three times as much married as men, dat dey ought to have a right to pick out dey husbands. Neiderso' is I sputin' dat it makes a lot of trouble when a woman has to take her CANS instead of her RUTHERS in men, but it wouldn't do women no good ef dey did have de right to pop de question.

"Caze de men would all say 'no.' For dis reason—a man don't never think well of nothin' onless he thinks he thought of it first. Ev'y married woman knows dat ef she will let her husband have de first word she can have all de balance of um. Dat's de reason dat ef a woman was to propose to a man he'd be so contrary dat he wouldn't have her becaze he didn't think of it to begin with. Yassum, men sholy is curious creeters, an' it sut'ny does rub de fur de wrong way for a woman to git de start of a idee wid um, an de woods sholy would be full of ole maids ef women took to proposin'.

"But, shoo! Whut does a woman wid a cookin' stove to her hand, an' a tongue in her mouth to tole a man up to de altar, wha have to go an' pop de question to him? Any woman dat don't know no more dan dat about managing men ain't got no call to git married. Nawm, she's gittin' in de wrong pew an' she better stay whar she is.

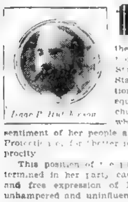
Abolish Machine Domination, Get to Work with a Will, with Workers Doing Work

—Isaac P. Hutchinson.



Isaac P. Hutchinson

T[illegible] the [illegible] party [illegible] its position upon the great tariff question. [illegible] State [illegible] States and the nation should know unequivocally Massachusetts's attitude, whether the strong sentiment of her people are for "stand pat" Protection, for "better markets" and Reciprocity.

This position of the party should be determined in her party caucuses by the full and free expression of Republican voters, unhampered and uninfluenced by or through any semblance of machine interference or manipulation.

To properly bring this great question before the party voters for such expression of their tariff views it is absolutely necessary to have at least two candidates within the party for the nomination for the office of Governor. [illegible] of these candidates should be [illegible] with [illegible] a strong advocate of Protection [illegible] the most [illegible] in its views for Reciprocity.

Many Republicans [illegible] who are in grave doubt [illegible] party in Massachusetts [illegible] all familiar with any correct understanding as to its own position upon great political problems with which [illegible] has to deal.

The party this year [illegible] afford to support candidates who cannot stand firm for political policies, and no candidate can take or hope to [illegible] and water position and be elected.

To win success at the polls this year the Republican party must needs choose with the utmost care a candidate to head its State ticket. He should be free from machine favor and more than all else his selection should not have even the appearance of machine manipulation. His position upon public questions should [illegible] who [illegible] willing to sacrifice personal [illegible] his [illegible] desire to promote the welfare of the party.

There has been much severe criticism for many years because of a persistent determination to use the Republican party as a medium to maintain and promote the social aspirations of the political aristocracy of the [illegible] appointive offices within the party reach, both at home and abroad, have been manipulated, commissions almost without limit have been created, and every political office possible directly or indirectly has been secured.

But with all [illegible] previous demonstration of Back Bay selfish greed this is the first time it has been openly attempted to perpetrate upon their [illegible] the Republican party the stupid political blunder of nominating both the candidates for Governor and for Lieutenant Governor [illegible] the Back Bay [illegible] ward and precinct but from the [illegible] street. Is it to be wondered at then that there are [illegible] Republicans [illegible] those who feel [illegible] that they have [illegible] must surely be drifting down the pathway of political [illegible] through the inefficiency of its own party management?

There should be changes in the machine management in its unwise and unproductive methods. More good judgment and active effort and well-seasoned experience and less elaboration of meaningless conversation would be an improvement. The forty members of the State Committee should call themselves together in frequent conference and take the active charge of the campaign into their hands instead of leaving duties and responsibilities for which they were elected by the party to do and perform to the inexperienced management of those who have neither the inclination nor organizing ability to do the party the necessary service to secure success. Each member of the committee should have active charge of the campaign in his respective district.

Some of those who warm the comfortable armchairs at headquarters should be permitted to retire from party service, and their places filled by men who have some comprehension of the work necessary to do to accumulate voting strength to the party.

No very hurtful results would accrue to the cause if some who have to do with machine direction should be allowed to take a much needed vacation away back into the tall timber, the very tall timber—with a suggestion to sit quietly and reflectively upon a hollow stump and squeeze some of the folly [illegible] smoke from their overburdened and weary-working minds.

Must Insist Upon the Nomination of "Stand Pat" Ticket From Top to Bottom

Eugene N. Foss
Leader in Reciprocity Movement.

E. N. Foss

"WHAT must the Republican party do to win back Massachusetts?"

The Republican party in the first place has never lost Massachusetts not yet! Its majority for Roosevelt last Fall was the great figure of over seventy thousand, the biggest, excepting the McKinley landslide, since Lincoln and Grant.

To be sure, I for one, shall not pretend to deny that something happened as regards the head of the State ticket, but the victory of Mr. Douglas was not really a Democratic victory. The thing was done by Republicans, as they thought, and as some of them still seem to think, for the ultimate benefit of their party.

As soon as he was elected even before he [illegible] he found himself out to be a good Republican rather than a good Democrat.

In consequence, certain elements in his own party are, or have been, at loggerheads with him, and hence the present situation.

This situation would seem to suggest just now a more agonizing question than the one immediately before us.

A question something like this. "What must the Democratic party do to 'win back' a ghost of a show in Massachusetts?"

Now, as a matter of fact (that is, in my opinion), the Democratic party cannot accomplish anything in this direction unless the Republicans help them in the way they did last year.

One way to extend this effective assistance will be for the Republican organization in this State to again adopt a reactionary attitude and policy toward the reciprocity movement.

This first and foremost, by insisting, for instance, upon the nomination of a "stand pat" ticket from top to bottom.

The reciprocity element, so far as I am informed, seems willing now, to accept and loyally support Mr. Curtis Guild—provided conditions are made practicable for us. His nomination seems to be a sort of natural sequence, or development of circumstances.

He has really excellent qualities of both head and heart and will probably make (just as Chester A. Arthur did a President) a bigger and better Governor than some people anticipate.

These happy faculties have induced him, for instance, to recognize, in several grateful and graceful ways, the reciprocity movement.

He has not permitted himself to be bruised by falling upon the reciprocity rock, nor has he any intention of being crushed by having it fall on him.

BUT, we all understand that he has always been identified mainly with the extreme protectionist school, and we are disposed to think that this acquiescence on our part in his regard is enough to expect from the reciprocity Republicans.

Besides the other fellows will want and will probably get further concessions from us, if they will be reasonable but all the "Harmony" with the "big H," must not be at our expense alone.

I repeat, seriously and soberly, that conditions must be made such as are practicable for us, consistent with our political and moral integrity and self-respect.

We believe it is our duty and opportunity to restore the reciprocity principle to its legitimate dominance in the counsels of the Republican party.

To this end we intend to have something very particular to say, not only about the ticket, but about the platform and all the rest of it in this campaign.

Finally, to answer your very clever question according to its deserts, on how all these things shall eventuate, will depend whether the Democrats will see their shadow of a chance vanish, or whether the Republicans may possibly "get next" to another "jolt" in Massachusetts.

E. N. FOSS.
Leader in Reciprocity Movement.

Party Should Depart From So-called "Promotion System" for Governorship

A. H. Goetting
Former Chairman Republican State Committee.

WHAT must the Republican party do to win back Massachusetts? Your question somewhat puzzles me. I did not know that the Republican party had lost Massachusetts. I had supposed that the plurality of 92,000 votes given to Theodore Roosevelt made the old Bay State eligible to be counted in the Republican column.

If you will let me presume that my original understanding of Mr. Roosevelt's plurality gives ground for my belief that Massachusetts is still a Republican State and therefore has not been lost to that party, I may perhaps answer another question, namely.

What must the Republican party do to win back the Governorship?

My long years of service in the Republican party and my devotion to its principles may blind me to certain facts, but as I cannot see that the Republicans have lost the State, neither can I see that they have lost their hold on the Governorship.

I believe the Republican party is going to vote the Republican ticket this fall and that, of course, is the first step and the only step necessary to win back the Governorship.

Specifically there are a few things which might contribute to Republican success.

I have noticed a suggestion that the Republican party ought to depart from the so-called promotion system, that is from electing [illegible] Lieutenant Governor with the understanding that after he had served a three years' apprenticeship he would be gracefully elevated to the higher office.

A considerable number of people believe that New England is not getting a square deal under the Dingley tariff, and it seems to me that the Republican party, while not being narrow in its vision, ought to give special attention to the industrial and business interests of the State. We by no means abandon the principles of protection by insisting that certain tariff changes ought to be made in the interests of New England. Let us stand pat for prosperity rather than for a particular tariff law.

It would be wise for the Republican party to give the young men a better chance politically. President Roosevelt has brought thousands of them into the party. Let us show them that they are welcome. Let us encourage them, so far as possible, in their political ambitions.

I believe also that the reciprocity idea should not be antagonized. It is a question that should be broached in a spirit of honest inquiry. Thousands believe in Canadian reciprocity. Let us not say off hand that they are wrong.

These are some of the things the Republican party might do to win back the Governorship.

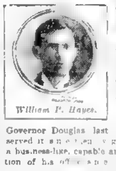
Former Chairman Republican State Committee.

Democratic Views

Name a Candidate Who Will Stand Always for Popular Interests and Popular Measures

—William P. Hayes.
Ex-Mayor of Springfield.



William P. Hayes.

IN order to elect a Democratic Governor this Fall the Democracy of Massachusetts must continue to maintain the confidence of the great masses of the people of the Commonwealth. This confidence was won in the candidacy and election of Governor Douglas last Fall, and he has preserved it [illegible] to Massachusetts a business-like, capable and dignified administration of his office [illegible] inaugural.

There is no doubt that he will continue to do likewise during the remainder of his term, and consequently the Democratic party will continue to hold the confidence of the people until the time comes for the nomination of a new gubernatorial candidate and the enunciation of a platform upon which he will stand.

[illegible] and the platform must appeal to the people.

They must not only appeal to the people, but must [illegible] assurance that they are worthy [illegible] continuance of the confidence that the people [illegible] reposed in the Democratic party of Massachusetts for the past year.

The signs of the times and the evidences of awakened popular interest in public affairs all about us demonstrate that the common people must be considered and computed in the winning of elections. Our candidate for Governor, whether he be a business man like Governor Douglas, [illegible] professional man like Congressman [illegible] lawyer, or a soldier like General Miles, must be such a candidate as to satisfy the [illegible] interests will be protected and [illegible].

We cannot afford to nominate any man who has been identified with interests opposed to those of the people, and every true Democrat trusts and hopes that the Democratic party will nominate a candidate who will be unquestionably with popular interests and popular measures.

In regard to the issues to be presented for the [illegible] much may be said. The [illegible] of last Fall growing out of the [illegible] administration of the Boston Police Board has been entirely eliminated. The record of the administration of Governor Douglas and [illegible] demand for a revision of the tariff, opposition to Trust exactions, the betterment of the public [illegible], and a revision of street railway laws to prevent continued consolidation and absorption of street railway systems, the improvement of industrial conditions where necessary, and other similar matters of popular interest should furnish some of the main issues of the campaign.

With such a candidate and such a platform the Democratic party stands a good chance of success in the coming election. With an uncertain [illegible] issues, it is fair to presume that Massachusetts will return to the Republican [illegible].

The duty imposed upon the Democratic leaders to select a candidate and shape the platform is a most important one; and it is to be hoped that they will so discharge this duty as to elect a Democratic Governor to succeed Governor Douglas.

WILLIAM P. HAYES.
Ex-Mayor of Springfield.

Organize and Unite Without Delay; Then Begin a Vigorous and Wholesome Campaign

—John P. Leahy.

John P. Leahy.

THE Democratic party was [illegible] successful last Fall in Massachusetts on account of the splendid campaign which was conducted on clean and broad lines. The divisions in the Republican party, and the fine character and personality of Mr. Douglas, undoubtedly contributed to bring about this result. Whether success could have been secured under different conditions, with a different candidate, is a debatable question.

In my opinion if Mr. Douglas can be induced to accept the nomination, he will again be elected. If all our efforts in that direction fail, there are a great many available and faithful Democrats who would admirably represent our [illegible]. A clean campaign, conducted on [illegible] and centralizing our efforts on the [illegible] aggressive of the Republican administration [illegible] should again lead to victory.

The Democratic party represents essentially the cause of the common people, and until it gains a full ascendancy in State affairs their interests will be neglected.

Mr. Douglas, in spite of the fact that he has had to submit to the views of a Legislature ruled by Republicans, a united set of Republican Commissions, and a Council in which his party has but one representative, has been able in many instances to place Democrats of fine reputation in important places where their services will greatly contribute to the general welfare.

We must organize and unite, and, if we are to be successful, our candidates should be immediately selected and a vigorous and wholesome campaign opened all through the Commonwealth.

The pretensions of the Republican party were earnest and confident last Fall, but in spite of their claims we were victorious. There is no reason why that same result should not be secured this year.

JOHN P. LEAHY.

If Douglas Will Not Run, Then Nominate for Governor a Good, Sound Business Man

—Charles J. Barton.
Chairman Executive Committee Massachusetts Democratic Club.

ATTEND the caucuses. Elect good men as delegates, elect good delegates who will attend the convention, for a delegate who accepts an election to a convention should attend.

Nominate a good State ticket, being just as careful in selecting the nominees for the minor offices as in choosing a candidate for Governor. I don't place very much reliance on platforms, but believe in nominating men who are in themselves the platform.

It is the duty of the Democracy to nominate the very best men obtainable for all the minor offices, Councillor, Senator and Representative. A good local candidate always helps and an unfit local candidate always hurts the State ticket.

Speaking as a humble member of the Democratic party, and not as a member of a political club, I can say that I firmly believe that, if the Democratic party wants to make the assurance of success in the coming election doubly sure, all it will have to do will be to induce W. L. Douglas to again be its standard bearer.

He was elected last year and can be again, for the common people, the rank and file, the men with the votes, are ready again to place him in the gubernatorial chair. If he cannot be induced to again serve his party, and, in serving his party, serve his State, I think the Democratic party should nominate for Governor a good business man, one who has had experience in running a business and who has made a success of it, and who can be relied upon to conduct the business of the State of Massachusetts for the benefit of its citizens, just as he would conduct a corporation for the benefit of its stockholders; for what is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts but a corporation, and what are the taxpayers but stockholders?

CHARLES J. BARTON,
Chairman Executive Committee, Massachusetts Democratic Club.

Nominate Gen. Miles and Continue Policy of Governor Douglas---Organize and Work

Prof. A. F. Chamberlain
Clark University.

IN reply to your question, "What the Democrats of Massachusetts must do to elect a Governor this year," I would say the party must have the best candidate and the best issues.

A candidate like General Miles is needed.

I do not know about John R. Thayer. Of course, all the people of Worcester [illegible] vote for him, but we do not know yet that he is a candidate for the nomination.

General Miles would make a fine candidate. He has a good character, a good history. He has represented his native State honorably and with distinction in many instances and under many trying conditions.

The party cannot afford to nominate a small man or present small issues. No mere politician or platform of generalities. We want a big man and big issues. We must stand for the advancement of the principle of reciprocity.

We must go on record as favoring more peace and less war, the stand that General Miles has so well taken.

We must insist upon the development of Massachusetts interests and industries and a continuation of the Governor Douglas policy in that respect. With a platform like that General Miles could win this year.

Of course, in order to elect we must have organization, and the work of the organization must be thorough and harmonious. But the great essential this year will be the candidate.

My advice is, first, get the very best candidate, second, have strong principles; third, organize and work.

I am personally a firm believer in the policy of municipal ownership of certain public utilities, but I do not think this is the year for the party to put that issue to the front. The municipal ownership issue is surely coming along and the Democratic party must take it up, but it would be better to have it come gradually than be forced to the front as the leading issue."

One of Life's Joys Is in Fighting Life's Battles

Weekly Sermon for Readers of Boston Sunday American

By the Rev. William M. Kimmell, Pastor of the First Universalist Church, Boston

Suffer hardship with me as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.—II. Tim., ii., 3.

THESE words were written during a time of persecution. The Roman Emperor Nero was attempting to check and possibly suppress the Christian faith [illegible] not only his own power but the power of the old religious system was bitterly [illegible] it.

To be an avowed follower of Christ was to put one's prosperity, and security, and comfort and even life, in peril. Many were the Christians who were being haled before the authorities and cast into prison, tortured and perhaps executed.

Those early days of Christianity have drifted far from us. The perils and afflictions of those first followers of Christ are almost forgotten. The circumstances among which we live are quite different from those among which they lived, but not entirely so. We are not tried in just the same way they were, but we are tried nevertheless. We are not persecuted, but we are often harassed, burdened, troubled and tempted, and I presume not less seriously so than were they. After all, life now is essentially what it was in their time. Hardship is still in the world and plenty of it of one kind and another. All of us repeatedly have hard things to do, or endure, and I suppose we always shall have as long as we live. And so Paul's words are as timely as ever. If they were fitting and needful when they were written, they are just as fitting and needful now.

If the right and good thing for Timothy to do was to take his share of the world's hardship without any shrinking or shirking, it is still the right and good thing for every one of us to do. I charge you to take your share of these in a stout-hearted manner. Do not try to throw them off upon others. Life has its trials. Do not attempt to escape from them so much as to overcome them. Life has its battles. Do not endeavor to flee from them, but go into them and fight with the bravest and the best. Do not dodge or desert, but "be a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

There is and must be this heroic note in all the great moral teaching of every generation. It must call people to bravely take their share of the hardships of their time, and to overcome the things that vex, and fetter, and burden, and grieve them, rather than merely to hide away from them. And it seems to me that this is the note that needs to be emphasized to-day.

We might almost call it the passion of our age to free life as far as possible from whatever hampers, and strains, and tires, and frets, and grieves. People everywhere are scheming and striving to clear themselves and others from everything that presses heavily and painfully upon them and make perfectly snug and comfortable the conditions of their existence. The ideal state of life as they picture it is simply the state from which hardship has been the most completely abolished, and of such a state they are constantly dreaming. Parents are dreaming of it for their children, and philanthropists are dreaming of it for the poor and unfortunate, and Socialists are dreaming of it for the neglected and wronged, and saints are dreaming of it for the tempted and fallen. It is a sweet, tender dream. It is born of sympathy, pity and love; and yet if such a state of life could be realized would it be as happy and blessed as it is imagined? I am sure it would not. In it the power, and relish, and joy of life would become lost, for these are actually the product of struggle. They are brought into life, not by ease and comfort, but rather by the mastery of what is difficult and disagreeable.

The only way in which one can get power of muscle is through the trial of his muscle, the only way in which one can get power of brain is through the trial of his brain, the only way in which one can get the power of his integrity is through the trial of his integrity; the only way in which one can get the power of love is through the trial of his love; the only way one can get the power of patience is through the trial of his patience; and the only way one can get the power of courage, and cheer, and trust, and hope is through trial of his courage, and cheer, and trust, and hope.

We talk about "living on easy street," but the strong masterful people of the world do not live there. It is no place for any one who wants to become strong and masterful, and develop activities and achievements that are of some consequence. He must live for a long while on some harder street, and let its very hardship bring out the power of his life.

The way to get rid of trials is to grow above them. The pessimist looks at the hard things with which people are everywhere wrestling, and says, "What a sad, sad world this is!" The optimist looks at the same things and says, "What a good, blessed world this is," for he looks not merely at them, but rather beyond and above them. He sees what they are doing to develop the greater life of men. He sees that hardship is one of the means God employs for the exaltation of his people. He sees that by means of it he brings little by little the higher state out of the lower, and the larger out of the smaller, and the richer out of the poorer, and the happier out of the sadder. He sees that by means of it he changes idlers into workers, and triflers into saviors, and cowards into heroes, and sinners into saints. He sees that the pain men would escape is the very experience they need and should covet, and the struggle from which they would be free is the very discipline they must have in the evolution of the diviner life.

The moral problem is not to make this hard world soft, but to take it as it is, and make this soft human nature hard and strong. You look out into the world about you and see possibilities of evil on every hand. You see restlessness and ambition, strife and suffering, drink and lust, temptation and vice all around you, and you wonder what is to banish all this evil from the world. It is not going to be banished—not speedily and utterly at any rate. It is here to stay for a long while, if not forever. But then you look around again, and you see what is possible—a miracle of the moral life beside which the triumphs of medicine are but commonplace. You see that the evil is not to be exterminated, but it is to become uncontagious. You see the pure life walking along these poisonous paths in perfect security, just as a hospital nurse walks safely through her wards, fortified against disease by her [illegible] consecration.

You say, "That is the way of the healthy soul. It carries safety wherever it goes because it is safe itself. It is not afraid of temptation because it is the master of temptation."

As Phillips Brooks has said: "Do not pray for easy lives, pray to be stronger men; do not pray for tasks equal to your powers, but pray for powers equal to your tasks; then the doing of your work will be no miracle, but you shall be a miracle. Every day you shall wonder at yourself, at the richness of life that has come to you by this grace of God."

To bear hardship, to endure suffering, to encounter injustice, to face disappointment, to grow more generous, noble, resolute, to rise with every new load of care or duty, to turn each stroke of pain into a wiser love, to stand up like a king to meet death and greet the "unseen with a cheer," this is the demonstration of the living God.

THE SUMMER RESORTS

Newport

Season's Gay Whirl Has Started.

Smart Set Planning for Many Novel Fetes.

Newport, R. I., June 17.—Outdoor entertaining will be a feature of Newport's Summer season, for on every side there are such indications to be seen.

Large verandas are so arranged that in case of inclement weather they can be adjusted so the guests will not suffer from indoor heat.

Lord and Lady Cheylesmore of London, the latter a daughter of Mrs. Francis O. French and a sister of Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt and of Mr. Amos Tuck French, are to spend the Summer in Newport. They will arrive about July 1 and will stay at Harbor View, the Summer home of Mrs. French, on the southern shore of Narragansett Bay. It is probable also that they will visit Mr. Vanderbilt at Oakland and it is certain that they will be handsomely entertained at many other Summer residences.

Lord and Lady Cheylesmore have been contemplating passing a Summer here for several years, for never have they been able to make more than a brief visit. Lord Cheylesmore's engagements at home have been such that not until recently has he felt that he could spare the time for an extended stay in this country. Mrs. French has her villa opened, and she will follow, to remain for the Summer, in a few days.

The handsomest of these [illegible] verandas with [illegible] electrical effects are adjoining the estates of Mrs. Charles H. Baldwin, Mrs. H. Mortimer Brooks, Mrs. J. De Forest Danielson, Mrs. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. R. T. Wilson, Jr., Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Frederick Cunningham, Mrs. J. Mitchell Clark and the Misses Mason.

At Sandy Point Farm, Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt [illegible] the drawing of the plans for the guests' closed outdoor dining room, which is arranged in white and green effects with tiny electric lights and numerous electric fans.

Last season Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, who occupied the Cleveland estate, gave all her entertainments on her large veranda, which was decorated in white and green effects even to the small electric bulbs.

Tennis will be the rage among the ladies, who are arranging for a tournament to run well into the end of September.

The arrivals are many and among the most recent are Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clews, Jr., who since their marriage three years ago have resided in Paris, where Mr. Clews has been eminently successful as an artist, his chosen profession, and which he will continue here this season while with his family. The young Clews will be the guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clews, at The Rocks, near Bailey's Beach, where some pretty affairs will be given for them. Mr. Clews possesses a wonderful baritone voice and he will, of course, be heard in some of the musicales his mother will give.

At the extreme end of the island Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt will give some pretty affairs and [illegible] amateur circus. Their showring house will be completed within a month and it will be well adapted for just such sport. A circus will be a novelty at Newport.

It is understood that on the lawn of the Perry Belmonts' place will be given a large entertainment for a worthy cause during the season.

Magnolia

Summer Season in Full Swing

Magnolia, June 17.—With the opening of several of the hotels this week, and the balance of the houses next week, the season is now on in full force in this section of the North Shore. Being more of a hotel resort than any of its neighbors Magnolia's season is inclined to hold back till the hotels open. Despite this, however, a majority of the cottages are now open and the number was greatly increased this week.

The beautiful summer villa of the Claude Kilpatricks on the shore road was opened the middle of this week. Mr. and Mrs. Kilpatrick and two of their daughters arriving from St. Louis.

Mrs. Charles Aldrich of Boston, who has been abroad most of the winter, has rented the [illegible] cottage on the Gloucester road for the summer and moved down from town the early part of the week.

Miss Ann Higginson of Boston, who has been spending a few weeks at the Stanley cottage, has rented the Sampson estate for the summer.

Blue Top Cottage, the beautiful summer home of Harvey Childs at Manchester Cove, has been opened in anticipation of the arrival of the family from Pittsburg the early part of the coming week.

Mrs. Rebecca Coffelt of Philadelphia is at the Sunnyside, on Norman avenue, for the Summer.

Pride's Crossing

The arrivals at this section of the North Shore the past few days have been notably large, the few hot days evidently driving people from the city to the shore. Scarcely a house now remains unopened.

Mrs. Quincy A. Shaw, Sr., is at the Commons, her villa on the Montserrat road.

Miss Juliet Higginson, who went over to New York the first of the week to see Mr. and Mrs. Francis L. Higginson, Jr., off on their honeymoon trip, returned Wednesday and yesterday she had a party of friends down for over Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Higginson will come to the North Shore when they return in August and will spend the balance of the season at Coolidge's Point, where they will have one of Mr. Coolidge's cottages.

North Shore

Manchester is in Summer Attire

Society Is Settling Down to Routine Functions

Manchester-by-the-Sea, June 17.—As the days advance the North Shore is fast assuming its usual Summer attire, and the gayety of Summer life is returning. Scores of families have arrived during the week, houses have been opened and the Summer colony is settling down to the social functions, such as dinner parties, afternoon teas, luncheons, and the like, as in the past.

The piazzas of the Essex County Club at Manchester and of the Myopia Hunt Club at Hamilton are alive with pretty society girls and matrons every afternoon. Little afternoon teas on the piazzas and small luncheon and dinner parties are getting to be quite the vogue.

The beautiful shady driveways all along the shore and the inland roads between the hours of [illegible] are fairly alive with smart turnouts and automobiles throng the roads. Notable among the young matrons [illegible] is Mrs. Archibald [illegible] (Miss Ethel Tucker), who may be seen out almost every afternoon in her father's big touring car. Mrs. Lindsay [illegible] the car with the band [illegible] the first of the week [illegible] the two pretty young daughters of Robert [illegible] of Milton and Boston as guests [illegible] stay.

Mrs. [illegible] (Miss M[illegible] Bearing), who is [illegible] fond of driving, [illegible] every afternoon [illegible] over the road to Beverly, where she meets Mr. [illegible] and the two drive down the shore to West Manchester.

Among the most recent arrivals are the Dr. Thomas M. Rotchs, who are again at their Apple Blossom Lane cottage. They arrived Thursday.

This morning Mr. and Mrs. Francis Meredith Whitehouse and son, after a delightful Winter in England, arrived at Crowhurst, their magnificent Manchester estate.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander S. Porter, Jr., who have been spending a portion of their [illegible] at [illegible] Stockbridge, have arrived on the North Shore, and are to spend most of the Summer with Mrs. Porter's [illegible] at [illegible] charmingly located cottage off School street, Manchester.

Mrs. John B. Schoeffel is soon to open her cottage on Masconomo street, Manchester, [illegible] Masconomo House, which is [illegible] for the Summer [illegible].

The [illegible] latter part of last week and [illegible] at the [illegible] cottage for the Summer. Mrs. Van Deventer [illegible] Miss [illegible] arrived a day or two ago and plans to spend much of the Summer [illegible] with her parents.

The E. F. Stotesburys of Philadelphia, who have taken the [illegible] D. Jordan house at West Manchester for the Summer, arrived yesterday for the season.

The Thornton K. Lothrops are among the more recent arrivals at Manchester, having opened their cottage Thursday.

The Oaks, the beautiful Summer home of Mr. and Mrs. F. S. [illegible] at Manchester, was opened yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] have just returned from a Winter's travel abroad.

Winnipesaukee

Hotels Open; Influx Begins

Alton Bay, N. H., June 17.—The Summer season on the shores of Lake Winnipesaukee has practically opened. The various hotels and popular resorts have commenced business. Oakbirch Inn at Alton Bay, the New Hotel Weirs at Weirs, the Senter House at Center Harbor and [illegible] Inn at Wolfboro have prepared for receiving guests.

The Lake Winnipesaukee House, which burned at Alton Bay a few weeks ago, is [illegible]. Having been a noted hotel [illegible] for upward of forty-five years, the Summer people that frequent the southern portion of the lake will now [illegible] as it was [illegible] to them a [illegible] spot. However, they will find comfort and rest in the new and [illegible] modern hotel [illegible], which was completed last year. This hotel has bookings for some prominent Bostonians as well as people from New York, Philadelphia and the South.

The steamer Mt. Washington of the Boston & Maine has [illegible] been newly painted and will commence running June 1[illegible], making one trip a day until the 26th, when the regular Summer schedule will go into effect.

The people of Boston and vicinity will be pleased to learn that the railroad has deemed it advisable to put on a Sunday night train, running from [illegible] via Alton Bay, Rochester and Dover over the Western Division to Boston, leaving Lakeport about 5.15 p. m. and arriving in Boston at 9.42 p. m. This has been a long needed want for many [illegible] Bostonians to spend Sunday with their families and allow [illegible] Monday morning. There has also been an additional train brought into the service [illegible].

SOCIAL brilliancy [illegible] without [illegible] pleasant, has marked the past week in Boston, and the social season will reach a grand climax in the gay functions and numerous festivities of the two coming weeks.

With wedding bells ringing right merrily all through it and the Country Club races bringing it to a close, the past week has been one gay ripple of social excitement.

The Wrenn-Dabney nuptials, at No. [illegible] called forth a large and fashionable [illegible]. The ceremony was [illegible] room, and while the rain [illegible] the [illegible] little "[illegible] Summer Church," all was bloom [illegible], and society was represented [illegible] around, coming even from New York, Philadelphia, Newport [illegible] for large, indeed, was the circle of friends of Gra[illegible] Dabney, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A[illegible] S. D[illegible] of No. 411 Beacon street, and [illegible] degree is Robert D. Wrenn, ex-tennis champion, Rough Rider, society man and broker.

Society in its finest gowns thronged to this most interesting and picturesque of June weddings.

[illegible] Dabney was far and away the [illegible] of June belles, for she is the glowing, athletic, typical American girl. [illegible] offerings for the [illegible] were of the best. Pretty women in gloriously beautiful gowns lent life and loveliness to the scene.

On Wednesday Bryce Allan had his [illegible] yellow and black "coach" out [illegible] merry party on top, including Mrs. Allan all in white muslin; Mrs. George T. Paris, June 17.—All Paris is laughing at the expense of the Kaiser, who is so highly elated over the Grand Cross of the Order of the Holy Tomb, recently bestowed upon him by Pope Pius X.

The fact is that this order is anything but highly estimated and several diplomats in fact refused to accept it during the Papacy of the late Leo XIII, fearing that it would degrade them, and Emperor William is the first sovereign who has deigned to accept it.

With these facts in mind many people are asking themselves if Pope Pius played the part of a joker when he let two cardinals and two bishops officiate when investing the Kaiser with the [illegible]

When and how the order was founded is not very well known, although some say that it goes back to the times of the crusades. It is certain that it was never founded by any king or sovereign and the best historians say that it originated with a custodian of the Holy Land, a plain monk [illegible]

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Lucerne, June 17.—Americans throng the hotels and are to be met on every side. The season promises to be exceptionally attractive in every way.

Among the recent American arrivals are Mr. B. E. Armstrong, Inspector of the Treasury; Dr. and Mrs. A. B. Chittenden and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. GAVE FAKE ALARMS TO WIN HERO MEDAL

Connellsville, Pa., June 17.—Because, it is said, he wanted a Carnegie medal for heroism, George Mercer of Meyersdale, last week warned the local officials of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad that a daring hold-up of the night express was planned at Indian Creek. Patrol engines and a decoy train loaded with armed officers were sent out, but no bandits were seen.

This week he notified Pennsylvania officials of a similar alleged hold-up. The same result followed, and Mercer was arrested and lodged in Uniontown jail to await a court trial.

'CONFIDENCES,' IN PARIS SALON, CAPTURES FRENCH ART LOVERS

Paris, June 10.—Among the 5,000 pictures that are hung in the Salon des Artistes Français [illegible] of 1905, is one by M. Etcheverry, entitled "Confidences," that has attracted much attention among the art lovers of the city. The painter is a pupil of Bonnat's, but in his [illegible] he betrays less of his present teacher's influence than that of his former [illegible]

M. Etcheverry, in his other picture [illegible] however, is Bonnat personified. In this connection it should be said that the two pictures by Bonnat himself are also attracting [illegible] attention. They are portraits of Madame [illegible] and Gaspar Meuler. The latter is regarded as especially good and it is pointed out that the artist in this picture has conquered the difficulties to be overcome in the painting of the modern costume.

There is another great art exhibition in this city, that of the Societe Nationale des Beaux Arts. Both are housed in the Grand Palais.

ISABELLA'S STATUES OF PLASTER SOLD

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, June 17.—The crowds assembled at the auction of the late ex-Queen of Spain, Isabella's furniture and things, were much disappointed. The statuary consists of cheap imitations, and the greater part was only plaster of Paris. The oil paintings were daubs, and if it hadn't been for the crown carved on all the furniture, they might be thought to belong to a deputy sheriff, or retired green grocer.

Several American women present bid on Isabella's ample silver bath tub until they learned that it was only "German silver." A little actress, backed by a big financier, [illegible] for a thousand francs.

Most people present were eager to see, at least, even if they could not buy, the golden rose given to Isabella by Pope Pius IX. But the auctioneer said it had been returned to Madrid, to be kept "forever" in the royal treasury.

The library proved a huge joke. This woman who reigned in Spain thirty-five years possessed of books only a fine volume of Don Quixote, with uncut leaves, eight volumes of the elder Dumas and fifty [illegible] by Terrail, a dime novel and blood [illegible] story constructor of the wild-est type.

London, June 17.—Charles Clark, the Chicago baritone who is soon returning to Paris to give singing lessons, achieved great success not only in society, but socially in London. At a recent party given by Mrs. William Hutchinson of New York and Washington at the house she has rented in Chesham place, Mr. Clark sang no less than a dozen songs.

Bella would be with him in another minute. It seemed too good to be true.

The train rolled into the station. George eagerly scanned the windows. Yes—there she was, almost at the end of the train, waving her hand to attract his attention.

How beautiful she looked! But how pale! And her great dark eyes looked sad and a little frightened.

He rushed forward to meet her, but she was out of the carriage before he reached her.

"Bella, my love!" He caught her in his arms and kissed her.

"George!" she sobbed. "Oh, I am so glad, so very, very glad."

The stationmaster [illegible]

"Well, I'll be blowed," he said.

Some porters and people on the platform who recognized Mr. Holland stared [illegible]

It was Bella who was the first to realize the position. She struggled from the young giant's passionate embrace.

"Oh, George, you mustn't—you really mustn't!" she panted. "And all these people about! What will they think? What will they say?"

"Hang the people," laughed George boisterously. "Let 'em say and think what they like."

"Yes, dear, but you must remember who you are. Things are different now. You are a great [illegible]"

"Stuff and nonsense," retorted George. "I've had quite enough of that. I'm just what I always have been, and certainly [illegible] to you, Bella. Things will [illegible] be any different where you are concerned, my girl. There now, don't look so mighty serious. Come along. I've got a trap waiting outside. Got any luggage?"

"Only my trunk."

"Yes, sir."

Bella started.

"How funny it sounds to hear them say that."

"Yes," said George. "I'm tired of it. [illegible] you [illegible] girl? You are looking very ill. What's the news?" His voice and manner grew very grave, and [illegible] in his eyes. "Tell me," he said. "I'm [illegible] to know."

"Not [illegible]," she said. "I'll tell you later."

"Have you found him?"

"Yes," she said.

"Then he is alive."

"No," she said solemnly, "he is dead."

"Dead! Is it possible?"

"Yes, he has been dead more than a year."

A brief silence fell between them. Then the man spoke.

"Bella," he said, and he slipped her hand under his arm, "I'm very, very sorry."

"Don't, George," she whispered, "don't let us think of him. I am sorry for him, of course. I am sorry that he is dead. And yet, oh, my dear, I do not think I have anything with which to reproach myself. He was never [illegible] to me. I never really loved him [illegible] very near to loving [illegible] but [illegible] he is dead now. Let us say nothing more about him."

"How did you trace him?" he asked.

"Oh, it's a long story. I will tell you all that later. We have so many other things to talk of now."

They passed out of the station. Foster was standing by the horses' heads.

"I'm going to drive you to Holland Home," said George. "Aren't they a pair of beauties?"

"Oh, George," exclaimed Bella, "how lovely! Are they yours?"

"Yes, my dear, everything is mine. I am [illegible] dazed at the things that belong to me."

"Oh, aren't you proud, and aren't you happy?"

"I am very proud and happy now," he said, looking down at her tenderly. "All that is mine is yours, or shall be very soon, Bella, my darling," he whispered. "We must not wait long. We've waited long enough. It is [illegible] You are to my very own."

She looked up into his blue eyes, that shone with whole-hearted affection, and said:

"I have always been yours, Georgie," she said.

"And you will marry me?"

"Yes."

"It must be at once," he said, impulsively. "I can't wait."

"It shall be whenever you like," she murmured, clinging to his arm.

George's heart leaped within him. Bella was just the same. She had not altered in the smallest degree. She had come back to him [illegible] as she had left him. He was a happy man indeed. When she had left him there had been no secret about their love, but she had not been free. Now she was free to marry him.

How brightly the sun shone! How blithely the birds sang in the budding woods [illegible] Everything seemed [illegible] All nature [illegible] in a [illegible] of joy.

Bella [illegible] forgot that glorious drive from Mapella to the house. As she sat beside her lover and felt the keen Spring air rushing past her, she would like to have gone on like this for ever.

Then they came to the park and the splendid avenue. Bella cried out like a delighted child.

"How lovely! How perfectly heavenly!"

And then the home came into view, its wilderness of [illegible] and [illegible] gleaming in the sun.

"Oh, George, to think that all this is yours," she gasped.

"[illegible] think," he cried, "[illegible] you are [illegible] That is what [illegible]"

"Oh, [illegible] I will try and be worthy of [illegible]"

They drew up in front of the grand entrance. Mrs. Holland, looking pale and very [illegible], was standing on the steps to meet them. She had seen them approaching from her window, which commanded the long drive.

"Welcome to Holland Holme," she said, as she kissed Bella.

"Welcome to your future home," said George. "Mother, I must tell you the news at once. I can't wait. I'm just bursting with joy!"

"What is it, George?" asked Mrs. Holland, a little nervously.

"Bella Is Free,"

said George, "and she has made me the happiest and proudest man in all the world by promising to be one my wife."

"George! Bella! Oh, I am so glad—so glad!"

"And it is to be at once. No time to be lost. We've lost far too much already. Bella, my love, my wife that is to be, I [illegible]"

"I am very proud," she said, "and very happy, and, and, oh, it all seems so strange and unreal, Georgie. I only want to be your wife."

"Where is Mr. Vaughan, eh?" asked Holland.

"Mr. Vaughan is in the library, Georgie. By the way, Mr. Blenheim is going to dine with us to-night."

"Good old Blenheim!" laughed George. "He's the lawyer chap, you know, Bella. By Jove, I'll make him sit up to-night when I tell him the news. He thought I was going to marry a princess, I fancy. But let's go and look up Mr. Vaughan. I must tell him. Mr. Vaughan," he explained to Bella, "is my keeper."

"Oh, George!" protested Mrs. Holland.

"Well, that's a fact," insisted Holland. "I'm supposed to be a sort of wild man of the woods, without any education or manners or ordinary common sense. So I am, I suppose. So old Mr. Blenheim [illegible] him puts me in charge of Mr. Vaughan. Lord, I have been having a time of it trying to mind my p's and q's and cross my t's and dot my i's! I must do this or that, or talk so and so, and go to this place. It isn't the civil to a servant, or pass the time of day with anybody. I've got to wear foolish clothes and change 'em half a dozen times a day. I've got to eat my meals at all sorts of absurd hours and [illegible]"

"Oh, Georgie," protested Mrs. Holland, "you do exaggerate so. Don't you believe him, Bella. [illegible] that he [illegible] compelled to conform [illegible] ordinary conventions of society."

"[illegible] at her, Bella!" George [illegible] laughter. "The ordinary conventions of society. Mother [illegible] Mr. Vaughan! I tell you just as I told him that [illegible] to the [illegible] conventions of society."

"[illegible] sounds very [illegible]," laughed Bella. "But I'm awfully [illegible] you say [illegible] I should hate to [illegible] to [illegible] ape the grand lady, because I simply couldn't."

"You'll have to learn," said George [illegible] "just like I am. As Mr. Vaughan says, it's merely [illegible] Here's Mr. Vaughan."

[illegible] Vaughan [illegible] them [illegible]

"Mr. Vaughan," said George, in his [illegible] way, "[illegible] just the man I wanted to see. Come here, sir, and let me introduce a lady [illegible] Oh, forgive me, I forgot, sir. You [illegible] to the lady, don't you? All right, here goes." He turned theatrically to Bella. "Mr. Vaughan, Bella; Mr. Vaughan, this lady is [illegible] present known as Mrs. Bella Saunders, otherwise Bella, Queen of the [illegible]. You have heard me speak of her." Vaughan bowed profoundly. "She will soon, however, be Mrs. Holland, for she has promised to become my wife. We are engaged, sir. Congratulate us."

"How do you do, Mrs. Saunders?" said Vaughan rather coldly. He was thinking of his conversation with Mr. Blenheim at Greenwich earlier in the day.

"[illegible] won't you congratulate us, sir?" asked George.

"[illegible] certainly," exclaimed Vaughan. "Of course I congratulate you both most heartily."

"[illegible]," said George. "You don't sound like it [illegible] I forgive you, sir. I [illegible] nothing [illegible] day. I'm the happiest man in the world. Come along, all of you. Let's go in and drink to the health of the future Mrs. Holland."

PRINCESS IS NO WIFE, SAYS THE POPE.

Divorced American Woman's Long Fight for Sanction by Church of Her Union to Prince Rospigliosi Is Lost

CASE WILL NOT BE REOPENED

Ruling of the Pontiff Involves Not Only the Validity of the Marriage, but Also the Legitimacy of a Daughter

Rome, June 17.—Princess Rospigliosi, famous American beauty, formerly of Bangor, Bar Harbor and Washington, has lost her long battle to gain from the Pope a recognition of her marriage to the head of one of the oldest, richest and most noble families in Italy. Pope Pius X has declared that her first marriage to Colonel Frederick H. Parkhurst of Bangor was valid, refuses to recognize the divorce decree which parted her and her first husband and refuses to sanction her marriage to Prince [illegible]

Colonel Parkhurst, who was a member of the Maine Legislature, first met Marie Jennings Reid in Washington [illegible] years ago. They fell in love and for several years their life was happy. Two children were born. Then came discord and Colonel Parkhurst obtained a divorce.

His wife is a famous beauty, now about thirty-nine years old, and has been called recently the most beautiful woman in Rome. She was born in New Orleans and is [illegible] daughter of [illegible] Reid and granddaughter of [illegible] Reid, one of the most valiant American sea fighters. On her mother's side she is descended from the famous [illegible] family of Kentucky. Her maternal grandfather was United States minister to Italy.

After the divorce Mrs. Parkhurst met Prince Rospigliosi at Bar Harbor. He was an ardent wooer and [illegible] the favor of an ambitious woman. He is the scion of a most [illegible] Roman family, one which has [illegible] two Popes in Clement IX and [illegible] X. His palace is one of the show [illegible] of Rome.

PAIR OF BIG BLUE EYES RUIN STEAMSHIP MAN'S CAREER

Pretty Stenographer and Man Who Gave Up Home and Business Career for Love of Her

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, June 17. A pair of big blue eyes in the pretty face of his young typewriter has wrecked the business career and the domestic happiness of James Street, who was until a few days ago the president of the recently organized Street Steamship Company of this city.

Street is in the Polyclinic Hospital recovering from an operation for appendicitis. He has a wife and six children in Englewood, N. J., whom he has deserted and who are now penniless. The wife is the niece of Henry Gassaway Davis, who was the Democratic candidate for Vice President in the last campaign. She declares that her husband has been hypnotized.

The girl in the case is Edna Miller, a petite blonde, with big blue eyes and a soft lisping voice, who is only seventeen years old, and looks two years younger. She is the daughter of the late Dr. William Turner Miller, Palisade Park, N. J.

"Wife and Mother-in-Law."

One of the astonishing features of this case is that Mrs. Miller, the girl's mother, is now living with her daughter in Mr. Street's luxurious apartments in Gresham court, One Hundred and Fortieth street and [illegible]. The lease for these costly apartments was signed by Street with the Manhattan Leasing Company of [illegible] and the agents were informed that Mr. Street, his wife and mother-in-law would occupy them. [illegible] said Mrs. Miller yesterday. "Mr. Street is my friend [illegible] but the [illegible]."

"But who pays for these apartments?" was asked. [illegible] "It is his own business. I tell you [illegible] is my friend and he is only a [illegible]."

Intends to Marry Her.

"Mr. Street has taken steps to divorce his wife. He finds it impossible to live longer with her. If the marriage of Mr. Street and my daughter should happen to [illegible] interest [illegible] themselves."

Recently Miss Miller was [illegible] with an [illegible] which was performed by Dr. Daniel W. Torey, who lives at the Gerard and is on the surgical staff of the Polyclinic Hospital.

"The girl's illness seemed to drive Mr. Street literally crazy," said Dr. Torey, in frankly explaining his connection with the case. "He had been drinking heavily before this," continued the physician, "and once or twice I prescribed a preparation of chloral [illegible] the quieting [illegible] made.

Believes Husband Hypnotized.

"Dread of the girl's death was in his mind continually. I knew that he was a married man and that he had a number of little children, but none of these considerations counted against his infatuation.

"Why, one night in the early stages of her illness he tried to beat his brains out against the [illegible] in his library. He was literally crazed, so much so that he made all arrangements to marry the girl and invited me to attend the ceremony.

"One of Street's friends is a prominent Alderman of this city, and the infatuated man begged him to officiate at the wedding. But, of course, the Alderman, knowing all about Street's family, refused.

"There would have been no wedding, however, even if the Alderman had consented," continued Dr. Torey, [illegible]. The girl is too [illegible] and her mother [illegible] little book. They want no marriage until Street is legally divorced, and the plan is to force the wife to take the necessary action.

"It is reported [illegible] that Mrs. Street believes her husband to be under a hypnotic spell. That is nonsense. He is simply [illegible] the spell of youth and [illegible]. Miss Miller is strikingly pretty, with an almost perfect figure. His wife is a middle-aged woman with six children. That is the whole story. It is one of [illegible] hypnotism [illegible] the spell is strong enough to make Street do anything or risk anything."

Killed All Her Love.

Mrs. Street, the deserted wife, is in a pitiable state, dependent upon the charity of her sister. Throughout the winter she received regular and liberal remittances from the absent husband, but these ceased abruptly early in the spring. Mrs. Street is a slender little brown-eyed woman with a [illegible] forehead marked deep with the lines of care. There is an air of breeding and quality about her that suffering cannot dispel.

"Yes, it is absolutely true that I have been abandoned by my husband," she said. "My lawyers will disapprove of this interview, but I will tell all.

"That girl, Edna Miller, has hypnotized him. No better man than my husband ever lived. No woman ever had a more constant [illegible] He killed all that. Nevertheless I wish to do [illegible]."

Asked why she called it hypnotism, Mrs. Street answered [illegible]:

"What else can account for the slavery of a strong, loving and good man to a young girl? She has him so completely in her power, and he glories in his infatuation, boasts of it, and gleefully sacrifices wife, children and career.

"Mr. Street's madness has carried him to the extent of publicly declaring that he has already begun an action for divorce [illegible] at our last interview when I faced him with [illegible]."

Street was considered one of the most level-headed young business men of the city and his income, it was estimated, before he was deposed from the head of the steamship company, was $20,000 a year.

CATARRH OF PELVIC ORGANS NOT EASILY DETECTED

Physicians Frequently Mistake Pelvic Catarrh For Some Other Disease

Pe-ru-na, the Unfailing Remedy for These Complaints.

Mrs. Annie Harpole, [illegible] street, Portland, Ore., [illegible] of Liberty, writes:

"For over eight years I suffered with intense pains in the abdomen and pelvic organs.

"[illegible] I contracted severe catarrh, which [illegible] my system and finally settled in the [illegible].

Pelvic Catarrh Had Made Life Miserable. Pe-ru-na Gives New Life.

Mrs. Fannie Henderson, 2031 First avenue, Seattle, Wash., Past Grand Worthy Vice Templar, I. O. G. T., writes:

"I was in a wretched condition for over nineteen months, suffering with the troubles peculiar to women, until life lost its charms and everything seemed black to me.

"I suffered with chronic inflammation, was morbidly sensitive, and so nervous and irritable that I was a burden to those around me.

"If I was out of bed one day I would be in bed for two or three days after.

"I was no use to myself or my family. Only a source of misery and expense.

"Peruna [illegible] in a few short months. I [illegible] that my case was [illegible] enjoyed the best of health for over [illegible] months [illegible].

"You [illegible] that [illegible] condition of the system so common among women, removes that tired feeling and gives new life."

THE catarrh may be of the bladder, the kidneys, or any other organ of the pelvis.

These cases have formerly been treated by local treatment.

[illegible] instruments [illegible] and a great many other devices were used.

A large number of the profession, however, are gradually reaching the conclusion that the best way to treat these cases is by some good internal catarrh remedy that has the effect of eradicating the catarrh from the system.

Mrs. A. L. Orrison, 1905 E. Franklin street, Richmond, Va., writes:

"After three months' trial of your remedy I am cured of painful menstruation.

"After suffering untold agony for three years, and spending over a hundred dollars and finding no relief whatever, I began taking Peruna under the advice which you so kindly gave me.

"I shall never cease to be thankful for this, or recommend Peruna to all women whom I find suffering from the above ailment.

"I can now do all my housework and take long walks without the least ill effect.

"Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to you, and Peruna, for I am a well woman today."

FIGHT AGAINST GUILD FOR GOVERNOR.

Reciprocity Republicans and Those Who Oppose System of Succession Will Make Savage Attack on Slate

Three pretty fights are already on the bills for the State Convention of the Republicans and the developments of the last few days give promise of another that will make the three look like tame preliminaries.

The latest threat to be heard in Republican quarters is to the effect that Lieutenant-Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., is not to have the nomination in a walk and that the slate of the machine will be savagely attacked.

If the plans of the insurgents do not miscarry Mr. Guild and the Back Bay crowd will have the fight of their lives this fall. The reciprocity men are on the warpath and will join forces with that element in the party which is anxious to break down the succession system.

It is the plan of the State machine to put forward Eben Draper of Hopedale for Lieutenant-Governor, and Dana Malone of Greenfield for Attorney-General.

One of the best Republican politicians in the State, a man who has had experience in the high places of the party, told a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN that the fight against the machine this year would be to a finish. He said it would begin in the caucus campaign and every effort will be made to carry the caucuses against the known machine [illegible].

"There are two Republican candidates for Governor," he said, "and Curtis Guild and the Back Bay bunch that has controlled the party will not have the Governorship handed out to them. It has been said, and also denied, that Eugene N. Foss will be a candidate for the second place on the ticket, but I would not be surprised to see him a candidate for the first place. He might say now that he is not a candidate, but he might say something different later. It is too early to tell everything."

TRINITY TO-DAY WILL HEAR ITS NEW RECTOR.

Dr. Alexander Mann Preaches His First Sermon as Pastor of Boston's Influential and Famous Episcopal Church

The Rev. Alexander Mann, D. D., will preach his first sermon to-day, Trinity Sunday, as rector of Trinity Church. Dr. Mann assumed his duties as pastor a few days ago, when he and Mrs. Mann arrived in Boston and took up their residence in Trinity rectory, at the corner of Newbury and Clarendon streets.

The handsome residence has been completely overhauled for the new rector. The brickwork has been stripped of the vines that covered it for many years, while the interior walls and woodwork have been repainted and decorated, until the place looks like new.

Dr. Mann was in one of the upper rooms when a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter called. The weather was very warm and Dr. Mann was bustling about with his coat off as industriously as anyone in the house. Despite the heat he appeared to be enjoying himself hugely and all geniality as he invited the reporter to step into his study down stairs.

"Well, really, I don't think there is anything I could tell you now that would be new," said Dr. Mann. "Mrs. Mann and I have come over to-day to straighten things out. We expect to go back to Orange again and will return with the children at the end of the week. We will then be settled here."

Besides Mrs. Mann, Dr. Mann's family consists of two handsome little fellows, Duncan, four years of age, and Alexander Cameron, about one year old.

"Yes, I will preach in Trinity on Sunday, and on the last Sunday in June," continued Dr. Mann. "We will then go down to Cotuit for the Summer. We have already spent a Summer there and enjoyed it very much."

DOCTOR SAVES SICK MAN FROM THE FLAMES.

Heroic Act of Physician One of the Incidents at a Fire Which Destroyed Large Portion of a Malden Factory

Fantino Ciotti, ill with pleurisy, was lying helpless on a bed in a second-story room in the dwelling house on Commercial street, Malden, which is next to the Bay State Moulding Company's factory, when the latter building caught fire last night and the tenants of the other structure fled to the street in panic.

Not one person in the two families living in the house stopped to rescue Ciotti, but Dr. Farrow, his physician, thought of his patient as soon as he saw the sky lighted up by the blaze.

Dr. Farrow hurried to the house and rushed upstairs to the room where he found Ciotti [illegible] and carried him to safety to the street. The patient is seriously ill and was in great pain.

The factory consisted of three large wooden buildings, which were stocked with [illegible] Two of them were [illegible] spread with such rapidity that it was feared the [illegible] McLoskey and [illegible] Company's [illegible] business block [illegible] other buildings nearby.

The Malden firemen had a hard fight to subdue the flames. Fireman James J. [illegible] was cut by glass, and Firemen R. H. Wetherbee and R. B. Cooking were overcome by smoke and had to be carried out by comrades.

The factory is owned by Baker & Coomes, and E. P. Baker said to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter:

"I can't lose the time," responded Bartlett. "I guess I'll move along."

VIOLIN UNITED AGED SINGER AND FAIR YOUNG ARTISTE

MUSIC ROMANCE OF HUTCHINSON AND MISS VINCENT.

Stranger and More Beautiful Than Fiction Is the Story of the Octogenarian Vocalist of Abolition and the Violiniste

NOT DAUNTED BY THREAT OF SUIT

PRELUDE.

Out of the realm of the romances of the most imaginative writers comes no stranger or more beautiful story than that of the venerable John W. Hutchinson of Lynn, who is to be married to a beautiful and gifted young musician, not one-third his own age, of the same city.

Hutchinson, eighty-five years old, is the last member of the famous family of sixteen who were noted in the agitated anti-slavery days for their songs of freedom. As the human voice has been used in later years by Sankey and other wonderful evangelistic singers so Hutchinson swayed thousands in the ante-bellum days on the momentous question of the day.

Music being the keynote of his whole life of more than four score years, is it any wonder that the tender, plaintive, quivering note of a musical instrument should seize him and hold him as the shadows of life's evening gather?

CHAPTER I.
THE VIOLIN.

Whatever the years did in the way of silvering the hair and beard of John W. Hutchinson, they never affected his love for music. More than that, they had but little to do with his feelings, and if a man is only as old as he feels, Mr. Hutchinson, on his own statement, has not yet passed thirty.

It was three years ago that the aged man was invited among many other guests, none more youthful in feeling than himself, to be present at a reception at the Hotel Vendome, in this city. It was an enjoyable occasion for Mr. Hutchinson, for there were present well dressed, cultured women, men of great intelligence and above anything else musicians.

In the course of the evening Mr. Hutchinson was thrown vis a vis with a very pretty young woman. His talk naturally drifted to music and in the young woman he found a good listener. A pianist had just played a sonata. A violinist followed with a [illegible] tender melody that touched the heart of the old time singer. When the violinist ceased he heaved a long sigh and with a tender look in his eyes said:

"Ah, the violin—the violin that is the one instrument that touches my heart. It holds the gamut of the human emotions."

The old man sat for a moment with his hands before his face unheedful of his companion. In a moment there stole across the room to him a voice that thrilled him through and through. It was the voice of the same violin, but it had a cadence that soothed his soul. He listened to a few preliminary notes that appeared to [illegible] be improvised and then there fell upon his ear the melody that he had sung to hundreds of thousands of people in the old days.

His heart [illegible], there was a choking [illegible] and tears welled in his eyes so that he could not see across the room.

[illegible] said, turning to where his companion [illegible] "that touches me—excuse me [illegible]."

And [illegible] saw that he sat alone. The [illegible] girl who had sat by his side was gone. The tones of the violin [illegible] the room, still touched his heart. He [illegible] his eyes to the player—what did he see?

THE VOICE.

When Miss Vincent poured out her soul on the violin at the Vendome reception for the benefit of John W. Hutchinson she was casting bread upon the waters. She herself [illegible] through and through. She felt that the aged man beside her was of the [illegible] temperament, but she knew nothing [illegible] triumphs of his past, nor had she ever [illegible].

When the young artist had finished her [illegible] toward her former [illegible] her half way and [illegible] hand in his.

"[illegible]" he exclaimed, and his voice [illegible] like the tender [illegible] she had laid down. "You have done me a world of good. I [illegible] you now."

"I am happy to have pleased you," she replied.

"Will you be kind enough to let me sing [illegible]?" Mr. Hutchinson [illegible] but [illegible] will permit an old [illegible].

"I [illegible] happy," said the young woman, flushed with the [illegible].

In a few evenings Mr. Hutchinson called upon Miss Vincent at her home in Lynn. [illegible] She [illegible] to one of his [illegible]. And then for the first time she [illegible] human voice.

On the [illegible] she had heard noted [illegible] there was a man [illegible] his notes. Song after song the grey bearded [illegible]. When he left [illegible] had been [illegible] by the puissance of the human voice.

CHAPTER III.
LOVE'S VICTORY.

Years were levelled in the days that followed. Ponce de Leon sought in vain for the fabled fountain of youth and died old and [illegible]. [illegible] listened to the music [illegible] young woman [illegible] was [illegible].

It was [illegible] days that the old man told Miss Vincent [illegible] marvel [illegible] Civil War and when [illegible] North [illegible] before great [illegible] when his voice swayed [illegible] orchestra leader [illegible] He told her of the times that he sang in the White House for President Abraham Lincoln, and it seemed that [illegible] had stepped out of [illegible].

Days, weeks and months slipped by, but not a day that they were not in each other's company. And then the old man, with his heart on his lips, asked her the great question of her life and of his.

"Will you be my wife, [illegible] to love and cherish until I hear life's last song?"

THREAT OF VENGEANCE.

The aged singer had not been doing his courting under cover. Everybody knew of his infatuation for the young woman and they approved of it, that is [illegible].

And here comes a reminiscence of the old days. Almost as famous as Mr. Hutchinson was Miss Ellen F. Wetherell in the troublous days just before the war and after. A woman of strong personality, gifted intellect and a wonderful platform speaker, it was no wonder that the [illegible] man and Miss Wetherell became fast friends. They were kindred [illegible] fighters, both working for the good of humanity.

Many days and months they spent in each other's company. She [illegible] to a great crowd and [illegible] with her voice, he appeared and swayed them with his song. And so the years passed by, threading the hair of each with silver strands, until his was a mass of snow.

The day Miss Wetherell [illegible] that he [illegible] started [illegible].

"Are you going to marry [illegible]?"

"I am not," he says he replied. "I am engaged to a young woman at the present time and could not marry you."

Miss Wetherell consulted [illegible] to a suit for breach of promise. [illegible] no further [illegible] it never will.

CHAPTER V.
"SOME DAY—SOME DAY."

Miss Vincent is now on the road travelling with a musical company playing the violin and the saxophone. Her mother in Lynn approves the match between her daughter and Mr. Hutchinson.

When seen by a reporter of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN at his home the old man said:

"I proposed marriage to Miss Vincent, and she accepted. I was moved by two impulses. I thought [illegible] be always [illegible]. We [illegible] might play and sing [illegible] she sings almost as well as she [illegible] though I was sixty years [illegible] waived that when I realized that she did not see in age an obstacle to the proposal.

"I thought, too, that with my money I could give her the musical education which her talents deserved. I would not only have the satisfaction of developing a great artist [illegible] would be sought by king and potentate, but that I would earn the thanks of the music world for having added another star to the galaxy of great artists.

"Yes, she accepted me almost immediately. The [illegible] violin had played its part well. We were to have been [illegible] May, but my property in the mean time was put into the hands of trustees and for that reason the [illegible] did not take place. Of [illegible] money tied up I was not free to carry out the high ideals I had conceived, but the trusteeship will soon [illegible] I hope, and then we will [illegible]."

"How long before you hope to make Miss Vincent your wife?" was asked.

"Oh, the Lord only knows," he replied. "But I am confident that some day it will take place."

Under the terms of the contracts, which were signed at Yokohama, all the locomotives are to be delivered there before [illegible].

Within three weeks the last of the first 100 locomotives for Japan were shipped from Philadelphia, and the Minnesota of the Great Northern Steamship Company has just landed at Yokohama the first fifty seven locomotives of that lot. The freight charge from Philadelphia across the United States by rail and then across the Pacific Ocean by ship to Japan is about $1,000 per locomotive.

JOINT TACTICS END IN FIERCE SHAM BATTLE.

Terrific Firing Marks Final Assault by Navy on Forts Monroe and Wool in Most Realistic Event of "War"

Fort Monroe, Va., June 17. Never in the history of Fort Monroe and the other forts guarding the entrance to Hampton Roads was such a spectacular battle been fought here as occurred today between half-past eleven and noon, the hour set for the termination of the manoeuvres.

Rear Admiral Dickins's entire battle fleet with [illegible] and the other ships following in single [illegible] passed the forts and into Hampton Roads blazing away with all the guns at its command.

The engagement was opened at exactly half past eleven by twelve [illegible] mortars in Fort Monroe.

With battle flags flying and gaily decorated in all their colors, ship after ship sailed serenely into Hampton Roads and anchored.

The fire was terrific. All the guns in Fort Monroe, as well as those in Fort Wool, across the channel, answered the guns of the fleet. It mattered not that no fleet could ever have remained afloat under such a fire as was delivered from the forts. Admiral Dickins and General Wade proposed that the manoeuvres should end in fire and thunder.

First each in turn poured its broadside into Fort Monroe and then into Fort Wool. The crash of the big guns and the sharp [illegible] of the small rapid fire guns was so realistic that one might suppose some energetic but foolhardy enemy was trying to force an entrance past the impregnable forts.

AGED MAN KILLED BY SPIDER'S BITE

Worcester, June 17. John C. O'Keefe, a seventy-four-year-old gardener, has died here as the result of being bitten last November by a big black spider.

A few days after he was bitten the arm became swollen to twice its normal size, and the wound gave forth a septic discharge. Although the best physicians were summoned the bite caused blood poisoning, and was the direct cause of the old man's death.

LINER MAKES PORT WITH FIRE IN HER HOLD.

Savannah Steamer, the Kansas City, Arrives in New York with Sixty Passengers and Her Decks Badly Blistered

Her sixty passengers were [illegible] at the rail when the ship went past the Quarantine station ready to leave the burning vessel when the gang plank was lowered at the pier.

Three revenue cutters and a small fleet of tugs accompanied the Kansas City after she made her plight known to the signal station at Sandy Hook, in case they were needed.

The passengers were in semi-panic when the fire was discovered, and women fainted when clouds of smoke curled up alongside the rails and through the cabins.

Those in the forward cabins were unceremoniously thrown out by the ship's officers, and many passengers were [illegible] asleep [illegible] not knowing that smoke was filling [illegible] and that they were in peril of suffocation.

The crew of the ship [illegible] most [illegible]. The fire was first discovered at 6:30 a. m. [illegible] even before all of the passengers were aware of their danger every lifeboat in the [illegible] had been [illegible] from the davits and made ready, water casks filled and water tight boxes provisioned.

The ship made quick time to her dock with the assistance of the cutters and the passengers left immediately. The fire department was called [illegible] extinguish the [illegible].

ARABIC HERE WITH MANY PASSENGERS

The big White Star Liner Arabic arrived at her dock in Charlestown to-day from Liverpool several hours ahead of time, with a big list of passengers. The Arabic made a fast trip and although ahead of schedule time when she docked would have made even a better record had she not encountered two days of fog. She had 141 first cabin passengers, 188 second cabin and 394 steerage passengers. The voyage occupied seven days, 4 hours and 13 minutes.

300 CHILDREN ARE MADE HAPPY BY BIG FIRM.

Boys and Girls Employed by the R. H. White Company Are Given Outing at Dorchester at Expense of the Firm

[illegible] decorated wagons [illegible] the youngsters to [illegible] the boys and girls climbed into the wagons they were presented with [illegible].

As [illegible] started there were cheers for Mr. [illegible] and for Frank Carroll [illegible] and [illegible] Southerland, who [illegible] had charge of the small army.

Mr. [illegible] of this [illegible]. He started [illegible] four years ago and has repeated it each year.

Upon reaching the park the children found [illegible] for them. Swings [illegible] and all that goes to make the [illegible] day [illegible] was served and [illegible] from [illegible] to the [illegible]. At the end of the day ten [illegible] West Newton [illegible].

[illegible] there were all kinds of games. The prizes were of money, [illegible] won a prize. The first race [illegible] dash was won by Louise Brett, with Lizzie Arnold, second, and [illegible] of whom received money prizes. The potato race was won by Mary Devon with Mary Dolan, second, and Lizzie Barry, third. The hopping [illegible] by Alice Harrington. The second 100-yard dash was won by Mary Davis with Kate McDougal second. The [illegible] was won by Katie Downing, with Sarah [illegible] second.

Two baseball games were played. The first between the cash girls and the examiners, the latter winning 10 to 2. The second game was between the stock girls and the examiners, the latter winning, 4 to [illegible]. The boys also had their own sports.

Because of the fact of the children living in the different parts of Boston, car fare was given each and they were allowed to go to their homes as they pleased. The day's outing came to an end at 7 o'clock after many cheers for the R. H. White Co.

Because Rollicking Young Denver Woman, Astride a Horse, Was Shown in Photographs, They Were Ordered Destroyed

GERTRUDE DUNN HAS NO REGRETS TO OFFER

Many Prints Were Sent About the Country Before Request of Secretary Loeb to Suppress Them Had Been Received

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Denver, June 17.—Much amusement has been caused among Denverites by the order received from President Roosevelt, through Secretary Loeb, that the pictures of the President's party, which contain a likeness of Miss Gertrude Dunn astride on horseback, be destroyed. Miss Dunn takes a humorous view of the situation and indicates she has no regret for having caused the President so much uneasiness.

The President's order to destroy negative and prints is being complied with so far as it is possible to do so. Unfortunately a good many prints were made before the receipt of Mr. Loeb's letter and they have been scattered about the country, some of them having been sent to friends in the East. It would be a difficult matter, of course, to recover any of these photographs.

Miss Dunn is a rollicking young woman, who is generally liked. To-day she appeared on the streets in the very costume that has caused all the trouble.

The Ballad of Gertie Dunn

By James J. Montague

"THE picture mill is ready, pard," the Western Rembrandt said,
And Teddy with alacrity arose,
He smiled until his teeth looked like a fence around his head,
And struck a truly terrifying pose.

But hark! Upon the wandering winds is heard the horrid beat,
The [illegible]
And dashing into focus on a winging, swinging run,
Behold the slight and slender form of little Gertie Dunn.
For the racking race was run,
And the victory was won,
And implanted in the focus was the form of Gertie Dunn.

The Rembrandt pulled the trigger and the camera said "Click!"
As the smile still lingered under Teddy's ears,
Mr. Loeb exclaimed with forethought: "Take another picture, quick,
'Ere that ten-inch pleased expression disappears."

But who was this reclining in the middle distance there,
In a suit of shocking buckskin like the desperadoes wear,
With a riding skirt that ceased where the leggins were begun,
Who was it but [illegible] Gertie Dunn?
In a costume [illegible],
With propriety [illegible],
Sat serenely in the picture pretty little Gertie Dunn.

* * * * * * *

We speak of wild coyotes and of bobcats still more wild,
And of catamounts, the wildest of the lot,
But compared to Mr. Roosevelt these brutes are meek and mild,
When the Western Rembrandt's [illegible]

For [illegible] with an attitude of ease,
Not to mention [illegible] pair of knees,
Right behind the back of Teddy in a [illegible] streak of sun
Was the winsome form of [illegible] Gertie Dunn.
Which is why in Washington,
It is hardly safe for one,
To refer to cowboy buckskins or to little Gertie Dunn.

ROYAL BLUE FLYER LEAPS TRACK, BUT FEW HURT

Marvellous Escape of Passengers on Train Going 50 Miles an Hour as Boys Throw Plank on Rails in Front of It

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Philadelphia, June 17.—As the Royal Blue Flyer from Washington to New York, going at the rate of fifty miles an hour, passed under the bridge at Thirtieth and Pennsylvania avenues this afternoon, boys standing on the bridge threw a plank down upon the tracks.

The engine struck it squarely, leaped from the tracks, carrying almost the whole train with it, and ran into a towerhouse, bringing it to the ground.

It seemed miraculous, but not one of the scores of passengers was hurt, beyond a shaking up. Engineer Walter Propert, who stuck to the lever, was injured about the shoulders and arms. Harry Sofle, the fireman, was crushed about the legs. Yardmaster Philip P. Rice, who was in the tower when the train struck it, was pinned in the wreckage and badly scalded.

Charles G. MacMullen, the tower operator, was on duty on the third floor of the tower. He saw the plank dropped, the iron leap from the tracks and come like a thunderbolt straight toward him, and he took one jump to the window and out. He landed on the ground thirty feet below practically unhurt.

Special officers of the railroad have been detailed to arrest the boys, but as yet have found no trace of them.

"LET PARTY, NOT FEW MEN, NAME THE CANDIDATES."

"The Republican party in Massachusetts must drop the Prince-of-Wales game of succession to the throne; it must get rid of the habit of handing down the mantle to a ready-to-wear candidate; it must cut out the cut and dried convention and go back to the open convention."

The above remarks were made to a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN by the Honorable Joseph H. Walker of Worcester, popularly called "Uncle Joe" in the Third District, which he represented for ten years in Congress and known the country over as the "Gray Eagle of the Quinsigamond," a sobriquet conferred upon him years ago by an opponent in debate in the National House of Representatives.

Mr. Walker as a lecturer on finance, as a critic of parties and politicians, as a breeder of fancy cattle and as just plain "Joe" Walker, is always interesting. No one doubts his ability or honesty or the real personal kindliness of the man. But the fact that he was never a trimmer and has always hit out from the shoulder in language both forceful and picturesque, whenever he felt called upon to express his sentiments, has caused foes to sit up and listen attentively and more than once has hurt the feelings of those to whom he has made reference.

"Will Have Trouble."

"If there does not come a change from this system of making the Lieutenant-Governor serve a three years' apprenticeship before he can be Governor, the Republican party will have trouble on its hands," continued Mr. Walker.

"The idea of making a man trot around and make speeches for three years as one of the conditions of his promotion from the second office! It's utterly ridiculous. It's worse; it's pernicious, this policy of picking out three years in advance the man the party must vote for for Governor. It isn't fair and it isn't wise policy. It does not comport with the dignity of the office to have a few name the man who shall be Governor.

"The [illegible] should be named in the open [illegible] of [illegible] dates, and [illegible] of the party should be [illegible] should [illegible]. That would be the wisest way to do it, and such a candidate would be the strongest with the people, and the Republican leaders must soon realize it."

"People Won't Stand It."

"Should it be done this year, Mr. Walker? It looks as if things were all fixed for Lieutenant-Governor Guild for the nomination."

"If the change [illegible] of course, it must [illegible], or, at least, with the assent of Mr. Guild and his friends. If they object I don't suppose it can be done. Guild has served his apprenticeship and, according to the succession program, is entitled to the nomination. It rests with him whether or not he wants to get it that way. It is not to be expected, under the circumstances, that he and his friends will favor the change of policy, and perhaps it would be well to let it go for this year so far as the head of the ticket is concerned. But there should be a beginning made this year on the second place, and no man should be nominated for Lieutenant-Governor with the end in view the governorship. The people won't stand for that sort of thing much longer.

"If it would be [illegible] the Republican party of Massachusetts must drop the Prince of Wales game of succession to the throne. It must get rid of the habit of handing down the mantle to a ready-to-wear candidate. It must cut out the cut and dried convention and go back to the open convention."

"Reciprocity! Pshaw!"

"What about the reciprocity movement, Mr. Walker? Will that have any force in the campaign this year?"

"Reciprocity! Pshaw! That is a political football. It's a catchword on which certain ones are ringing the changes for a certain effect. It's of no use. The people do not want reciprocity; that is, reciprocity is not the thing the industries of this State need. It's a modified tariff. [illegible] without any reciprocity attachment [illegible]. The tariff should not be for raising revenue. It should be for protection and nothing else.

"The McKinley and Dingley tariff was a protective tariff simply. It was not intended as a revenue making tariff. If it [illegible] been such a tariff the remedy is not reciprocity, but [illegible] to meet the new conditions. I know the purpose of that tariff. I suppose I had more to do with [illegible] than any man in Congress [illegible] Ways and Means Committee [illegible] district [illegible] varied [illegible] any other district in the country [illegible] wanted [illegible] for them [illegible] they [illegible] I have kept [illegible] before the committee and I know [illegible] the purpose of the framers of [illegible] was to make it protective [illegible] raising. The proper way for the [illegible] from [illegible] taxation.

Want Leadership, Not Leaders.

"The [illegible] seem to be disturbed by the refusal [illegible] again [illegible] Mr. Walker [illegible] anyone [illegible]?"

[illegible] She has had her leaders, but it [illegible] the spirit of the people to submit to leadership. And that is why [illegible] is where she is to-day. Look [illegible]. People marvel at the progress of [illegible], but the key to it is to be found in the spirit of the people that has submitted to leadership. They [illegible] sort of leadership they were given, but they submitted to it, and instead of trying to thwart its purposes, helped to make the leadership accomplish something.

Leaders Who Don't Lead.

"And there is the Democratic party. Chock full of leaders who don't lead. And not one of them willing to submit to the other. I remember the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Congresses and the grand chances the Democrats had to do things. But they didn't. The Republicans perpetrated a whole lot of foolish legislation in those sessions, and the Democrats never properly, really, tried to do anything about it. If they had, they would have received the support of enough Republicans to carry their points. Whenever Bailey tried to do anything some other 'leader' would get jealous and try to bother him."

"What [illegible] could the Democratic party take advantage, Mr. Walker?"

"[illegible] of finance [illegible]. That is the great question, if the people could [illegible] understand it. The whole financial policy of one government has been bad since the war. It has been and is simply atrocious. But the Democrats [illegible]. They [illegible] seeds to catch [illegible] with the purpose of improving [illegible]."

Should Give Free Rein.

"They could suggest a vastly better banking system and general financial policy for the country if they would. The last two national elections offered the Democratic party great chances, but it simply sat still while [illegible] and snarled at everybody and everything. The party should [illegible] back to [illegible] regard for the skeletons of some of the leaders of the past, and they would be more potent than the leaders the party has to-day. One of the skeletons of a real party leader of many years ago would be worth all of the leaders of to-day."

"And the Republicans, Mr. Walker?"

"Well, the Republicans of this State must get rid of the machine-made ready-to-wear candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. They must go back to the old style open convention, in which free talk prevails, and out of which is evolved the choice of the majority for Governor."

"Financial Policy Simply Atrocious"

This whole [illegible] of our [illegible] has been bad since the war. It has been, and is simply atrocious.

If there does not come a change from this system of making the Lieutenant-Governor serve a three years' apprenticeship before he can be Governor, the Republican party will have trouble on its hands. RISKS LIFE TO STOP RUNAWAY PAIR OF HORSES.

The horses were standing in front of the Hotel Sanford at the corner of East Brookline street when a boy threw some fire crackers near them. They set off at a gallop.

Tinfe, who was passing, took in the situation at a glance. By a [illegible] he reached one of the horses and pulled on the [illegible] until the animals stopped.

USED BISCUIT TO POP THE QUESTION

Marion, O., June 17.—A romance that began in a shredded wheat biscuit factory at Niagara Falls, N. Y., culminated in the marriage of Miss Rene Myrtle Albright to Mr. Owen Barber at Calvary Evangelical Church here.

Three years ago Miss Albright was a stenographer in the plant at Niagara Falls. Mr. Barber was one of the foremen in the plant. One day he placed a note in a shredded biscuit. It was a proposal of marriage, and he sent it to Miss Albright. Three years afterward, after the bride had moved to Ohio, he claimed the hand of the handsome young woman. They will make their home in Niagara Falls.

GLASGOW MUNICIPAL RAILWAY EXPERT COMING HERE.

James Dalrymple of Glasgow, Scot., is on his way to Boston, where he will stay a few days to look at the street railway conditions and start for home.

Mr. Dalrymple came to this country at the invitation of Mayor Dunne of Chicago, to give him the benefit of his experience with street railroads from a municipal ownership point of view.

Just what conclusion the foreign visitor has reached is not known. He has been quoted as saying that, in his opinion, municipal ownership in this country would not be advisable, because it would further build up political organizations.

It is said that the general impression is that he has found it [illegible] to size up the situation properly. He will sail from this port on the Saxonia Tuesday.

Of all the graduating class at Wellesley College, where there are some noted beauties, but one engagement has been announced.

Miss Katherine Bullard Cushing of No. 16 Magoun avenue, Medford, has announced to her classmates her engagement to Harry Van de Bougart of Boston.

It was news to the class that Miss Cushing had yielded to the pleadings of the little god with the bow and arrow, who is unusually busy this year among the members of the graduating classes.

Few in the college knew that one of the most talented pupils was so soon to marry. Miss Cushing's friends were aware of the fact, but they kept the secret until the young woman made ready to make the announcement herself. Miss Cushing was showered with congratulations. No date as yet has been set for the wedding.

CIGARETTES KILL YOUTH AT MELROSE

Heart disease, brought on by smoking too many cigarettes, is said to have caused the death of Philip Weler, twenty-three years old, who fell into [illegible] pond, Melrose, as he was about to step from a boat yesterday.

Weler had been out in the boat with several others for hours. He is said to have smoked four boxes of cigarettes during that time.

TO OUST BOTH ALEXANDER AND HYDE.

Superintendent Hendricks's Report Will Demand, It Is Said, That They, Tarbell and Others Shall Get Out

RESTITUTION OF PROFITS REQUIRED

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, June 17.—James Hazen Hyde, Gage E. Tarbell, James W. Alexander, Alvin W. Krech, H. C. Deming and Valentine P. Snyder, according to a close friend of Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks, will cease to be directors of the Equitable Society not later than July 1, on the demand of Hendricks.

The BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN'S informant asserted that Hendricks is so exercised at the state of affairs that he found in the Equitable management that he has determined to insist upon the removal of every official or member of the board who is in the least responsible for existing conditions or who has in the smallest way profited by his connection with the Equitable and its subsidiary concerns.

The report of Mr. Hendricks is finished, he declared today, and it will be made public not later than Tuesday."

The AMERICAN'S informant declared that it would be an impossibility for Hyde and his associates to remain on the Equitable board longer than the meeting of the directors next Wednesday week. He asserted that Hendricks would command that the resignations of Alexander, Hyde and Tarbell in the hands of Paul Morton be accepted at once.

It was said also that Hendricks would command that Hyde's check for $61,000 and Alexander's check for $40,000, which they made in syndicate operations, shall be retained by the society, and that they be forced to render an accounting for all the sums that they have made in underwriting, and that Tarbell, Krech, Deming, Snyder and several other officials be called upon to return to the Equitable treasury large sums they made by the sale of stock of the Equitable and Mercantile Trust companies to the Assurance Society.

The hollowness of the Ryan-Hyde arrangement for placing the Equitable policy holders in control of the society by giving them the right to elect a majority of the directors was made apparent today by the proclamation of an officer of the society that under no circumstances would the company furnish its policy holders with a list of the men insured. In the absence of such a general list, in what way can the policy holders even [illegible] the names of those eligible for the directorate?

It would be easy for Mr. Ryan to select from the list of policy holders 200 men, any one of whom would be his personal representative and manage the company as he dictated.

Social Tragedy

Women Who Brave Death for Social Honors.

In the midst of one of the most brilliant social functions of the season, a noted society woman started suddenly from her chair with a scream of agony and fell insensible to the floor.

A few hours later the distinguished physician told her anxious husband that she was suffering from an acute case of nervous prostration brought on by female trouble, and hinted at an operation. Fortunately a friend advised her to try

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The result was that she escaped the surgeon's knife and to-day is a well woman.

The derangement of the delicate female organism sets every nerve in the body quivering with pain. Headaches, backaches, torturing bearing down pains and dragging sensations make women nervous and hysterical.

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I was troubled for eight years with irregularities which broke down my system and brought on extreme nervousness and hysteria. I could neither enjoy my meals nor sleep nights, became easily irritated and nervous and very despondent. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound proved to be the only medicine which helped me. After taking the third bottle, my general health began to improve. At the end of the fifth month I was well and could attend to my household and social duties and enjoy life. MRS. CHESTER CURRY, 42 Saratoga Street, East Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Curry, whose portrait appears on the right, is the leader of the Ladies' Symphony Orchestra. The following letter is from Miss Goode, President of the Bryn Mawr Lawn Tennis Club of Chicago:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I tried many different remedies to try to build up my system, which had become run down from loss of proper rest and unseasonable hours, but nothing seemed to help me. Mother is a great advocate of Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles, having used it herself some years ago with great success. So I began to take it, and in less than a month I was able to be out of bed and out of doors, and in three months I was entirely well. Really I have never felt so strong and well as I have since. SAYS HUSBAND WON HER IN FOOT RACE

South Bend, Ind., June 17.—Five thousand dollars for the alienation of the affections of a husband who won her because he was fleet of foot is the amount of damages demanded by Hattie Hartel, a demure looking woman of twenty-four, from her parents-in-law, Elizabeth and Adam Hartel.

As proof of his affection the plaintiff told of the rivalry for her hand between Hartel and another young man of South Bend. Both went to the County Clerk and received a marriage license bearing her name and then ran a foot race to her side to claim her hand. Hartel finished first and she accepted him.

MARKET LEADERS WAITING FOR PEACE

SITUATION CLEARING, TONE HOLDS STRONG

Definite Stock Movement Is Still Postponed, Despite the Bull Sentiment Created by Favorable Circumstances

SHORT INTEREST BECOMING VERY LARGE.

New York, June 17.—While the market has been dull the short interest has been generally increasing. It takes enthusiasm to be a bull, and the traders, disgusted with everything, and especially with the new tax, have been selling.

The size of the short interest is out of all proportion to the volume of trading. Transactions last week have more nearly represented actual business than for many months. The traders have not jumped from stock to stock as they did when it cost nothing, but have taken a position and stuck to it.

[illegible] Metropolitan [illegible] situation. Their [illegible] the Hendricks report. Should that report make it [illegible] Thomas F. Ryan to control the Equitable [illegible] Metropolitan [illegible].

Several other stocks are oversold enough to force a sharp advance in the event of a favorable turn of public sentiment. The German Emperor is the only possible bear argument in sight, and Wall street refuses to take him seriously. Crops are in fine condition. Railroads continue to report larger earnings. While money will undoubtedly become tighter, there is no danger of any sharp rise in the rates [illegible].

[illegible] reasonable campaign. Nothing sensational will be tolerated by bankers on either side of the market.

Those who look for a moderate improvement in prices seem to be able to give better reasons for the faith that is in them.

With a [illegible] day in Boston yesterday and [illegible] dulness prevailing [illegible] Wall street [illegible] game of waiting which the [illegible] are [illegible] as yet unfinished.

That the market leaders are well content to keep out of the market is only too evident. While they are waiting, however, it becomes more and more manifest that [illegible] are favorable to a maintenance of the present level of prices. The [illegible] completion of [illegible] a few weeks ago. It is generally conceded that the last stock movement, which resulted in a decrease in prices, has been rounded out in all its fullness. It is also admitted that a new movement of prices is pending. Whether this will be upwards or downwards remains to be seen.

Waiters Are Winners.

Manipulators are Wise.

So much for optimism. Unfortunately the wise saws and modern instances of stock [illegible] news of moment. Disquieting [illegible] confidence [illegible] affairs pertaining to [illegible] gradually changing into a [illegible] promises to be [illegible] but until it can be seen [illegible] holding aloof.

People Should Plan Now.

A prominent railroad man who was [illegible] said that he was [illegible] the markets are dull. He added [illegible] time for the people to do a [illegible] delayed the corn and some minor crops.

Among the causes of the present apathy are the approach of midsummer, the growing of the crops, the Hendricks report on Equitable Life, the peace negotiations and the stock transfer act. There is no trend to the stock market. There is nothing, however, to favor the short side in any degree. There is, moreover, no cause for apprehension or discouragement. [illegible] Purchases [illegible] An extensive short interest still exists, and this must be protected. Meanwhile, bear raids must be lacking and [illegible] an open field.

Much Depends on Crops.

The absence of the speculative public from the market has of course helped [illegible] the prevailing dulness. This [illegible] of the stock transfer tax and by the fact that a period of technical crop [illegible] ahead. Very much will depend on the crops.

At the present time the continuation of [illegible] crop [illegible] favorable [illegible] money continues to be in ample supply, and the international complications not only will [illegible] no trouble but are in a fair way [illegible].

It is believed that stocks are being bought quietly on the belief that when the expected stock movement begins it will come without warning, and that then stocks can be secured only at a substantial advance. This character of the buying is believed to be on a large scale in the Steel issues. The steel trade has been dull for several weeks, but the business has been good, nevertheless, and promises to be considerably better. Men who are supposed to know the steel situation thoroughly have advised their friends to buy the steel stocks, in spite of predictions of a great decrease in the price. It is understood that no sharp advance is looked for [illegible] but that outright purchases will result in profits.

Market Was Stagnant.

The short session in the stock market yesterday was so quiet, and the term "stagnant" was so true of the trading, that even the professional trader, who could not keep away from the New York Stock Exchange, found that he was wasting his time. Many brokerage houses notified their staffs to shut up shop. In Boston the banks closed their doors and State Street was more deserted than it is on Sundays. In Wall Street the combination of the heat and the usual Saturday half holiday reduced the attendance on the floor of the exchange to a minimum.

Some of the traders [illegible] of the small sales made [illegible] the first hour, but then their chief desire seemed to be to get to the seashore as quickly as possible. There was little interest in proceedings, and what there was resulted from force of circumstances requiring the turning of stock into money.

Banks Show Small Surplus.

The bank statement was a disappointment [illegible] was just as much ignored [illegible] favorable one of last week [illegible] reported showed a decrease of $2,[illegible] making the figure [illegible] $7,205,[illegible] as compared with [illegible]

Copper Stocks Are Dull

Gas Stock Advances.

[illegible] coming voluntary decrease in the price of gas in Boston has resulted in [illegible] level in the price of [illegible] and preferred [illegible] expected to result [illegible] Gas Company [illegible] satisfactory than [illegible] and the expectation that [illegible] Gas Company [illegible] more than did the eight constituent companies individually will probably keep up the price of gas stock until specific figures [illegible].

Financial Notes.

Current exports of copper from Baltimore are 1,016 long tons fine and current imports are 1,509 tons ores at New York from Bay of Islands.

Corey, Milliken & Co., Boston.—There is hardly a cloud in the horizon of the world of finance and the bears are almost [illegible] for lower prices. The Equitable Life [illegible] is settled; the Russo-Japanese struggle has taken a peaceful attitude; and the uncertainty as to the crops is largely removed by the favorable Government crop report issued on the 10th instant.

Hayden, Stone & Co., Boston.—The attack upon the Greene shares, and some selling of United States Mining in anticipation of the issue of rights, have been the features of the Boston market. Otherwise the dulness has been profound. The supply of stocks hanging over the market seems to be very small. It is very easy for a clique to [illegible] such a stock as Mass[illegible] preferred, and now that the Mass[illegible] Gas Company's affairs are in permanent shape we think that it would be very easy to advance quotations for its shares.

$8,000,000 LEFT BY BANKER TO CHARITY

Vienna, June 17.—By his will the late Baron Nathaniel de Rothschild leaves $8,000,000 for distribution to charitable organizations, and for special charitable purposes.

A separate $4,000,000 is set apart for the establishment of a hospital for the free treatment of sufferers from nervous diseases other than chronic spinal disorders, insanity and epilepsy, as there are now hospitals which gratuitously care for sufferers from these complaints.

TUCKER TO HEAR ARGUMENT FOR NEW TRIAL.

Young Man Convicted of Murder of Mabel Page to Be Present at Hearing on Exceptions Before the Supreme Court

CONFIDENT THAT HIS COUNSEL WILL WIN

[illegible] State [illegible] Tucker, who was found guilty of the murder of Mabel Page, probably will be made on Thursday by his counsel before the full bench of the Supreme Court in this city. Tucker himself, who has manifested a great interest in the intricate legal phases of his case, it has been decided, will be present and hear the argument.

James H. Vahey, Thomas F. Vahey and Philip Mansfield, members of the firm of Vahey & Innes, counsel for Tucker, have been working day and night for the past ten days, preparing their arguments on the exceptions which will be considered.

It is not known whether at that time the counsel for the defendant will be ready to go ahead when the case is called and a postponement may have to be asked for. Thomas F. Vahey declared that the counsel themselves will not know until Tuesday or Wednesday of this week how they will stand regarding the argument Thursday.

Possibility of New Trial.

If the Supreme Court sustains the case [illegible] sitting will [illegible] perhaps within a month or two, and in the event of a new trial being granted it is not at all unlikely that before the end of this year Tucker will [illegible] for his life at the [illegible].

If the petition for a new trial is denied [illegible] taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. Messrs. [illegible] Tucker [illegible] the right to [illegible] new trial within [illegible] evidence or [illegible] warrant such a decision.

"A Fight to the Finish."

The court [illegible] as large as the one in which the trial was held at East Cambridge and will not accommodate [illegible] spectators. It has [illegible] Tucker was [illegible] the trial and hearing on the exceptions at East Cambridge. It is [illegible] from the rear, instead of from a side door, as at the East Cambridge court, and is arranged more for the purpose of [illegible] suits than murder [illegible].

"A fight to a finish will be made by us before the Supreme Court," said one of the counsel for Tucker to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN [illegible], "for this is our last chance in this State to secure a new trial for Tucker. We are confident of success, as we feel reasonably sure that the Supreme Court will grant our motion."

Tucker remains in the same cell in which he was first placed in the East Cambridge court house, and according to his counsel has confidence that he will soon be a free man. His buoyant disposition has kept up his courage remarkably well and the months of prison life have not robbed him of good health. He is at present in the best of health and spirits. He draws considerably, reads—magazines principally—and writes many letters.

Mother Visits Him Often.

He also takes great interest in reading the numerous letters which he receives, and the semi-weekly calls of his mother help to cheer up his quiet life. His counsel visits him frequently, and his father and brother go to the jail to see him whenever it is possible.

Tucker's cell is on the third tier in the jail at East Cambridge and is large and roomy, different from most of the others. He is allowed the freedom of the jail yard when the other prisoners are not about and also half an hour's exercise daily along the corridor of the [illegible].

THAYER SPEAKS FOR BAY STATE IN OREGON.

Former Congressman Orator on Massachusetts Day at the Lewis and Clark Exposition Before a Great Audience

ELOQUENT PRAISE OF THE COMMONWEALTH

Reference to Perilous Economic and Industrial Questions that Now Confront the Nation. Lesson of the Revolution

By Boston American Leased Wire.

Portland, Ore., June 17.—Bunker Hill day and Massachusetts Day and all that both stand for were observed at the Lewis and Clark Exposition to-day.

About the halls where gathered the delegation there were many besides the representatives of the State. One of the greatest crowds that the Exposition has yet seen had gathered for the exercises. In the reception party were Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Wilcox, Jr., Councillor M. J. Sullivan, Councillor W. A. Lytle, President Dana of the Senate, Speaker Frothingham of the House of Representatives and Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Fairbanks.

Dr. Elwin House offered the invocation. The Massachusetts delegation was presented by Commissioner Fairbanks, and the address of welcome was by President Goode of the Exposition. Governor Chamberlain of Oregon and Mayor Williams of Portland also made addresses complimentary to the spirit of the Massachusetts delegation.

Ex-Congressman John R. Thayer then delivered the Massachusetts day oration, in part as follows:

"Queen of Commonwealths."

Massachusetts, mother of States! Queen among Commonwealths! Her trade and development extend beyond the dream of avarice. Her rivers turn the wheels of industry, and the smoke of countless chimneys and the clatter of countless looms tell the story of [illegible] in [illegible] and the workman's skill. These bespeak in part her material prosperity.

"To the bleak and barren shores of Massachusetts came the stern, determined, liberty loving men to erect a home and found a State. There they built the first schoolhouse and founded the first college. There, through years of peril and privation, the first settlers struggled on in their purpose to build a State whose chief cornerstone should be 'liberty' and this audience composed in large measure of men and women in whose veins can be traced blood from Massachusetts sires, can bear willing testimony to the success of that noble undertaking, and to what extent that thought has followed the sun in its western course and has been felt and appreciated throughout the western world.

Foremost to Resist Tyranny.

"Massachusetts has a special and motherly interest in this great exposition, for she justly claims the high distinction of having furnished the first American explorers who ever set foot on this vast territory and here first unfurled the American flag. She looks back across the vista of 114 years to that gray morning in March, 1788, when Captain John Kendrick and Captain Robert Gray, two of her sons, first set foot on Oregon's soil at the mouth of the Columbia.

"Massachusetts, with Virginia, was foremost in planting the English colonies in America, foremost in resisting British tyranny, foremost in the revolution which won our independence, foremost to contribute to the exploration, settlement and development of this great and grand section of our national domain. The statement cannot be successfully refuted that of all the distinguished events in the wonderful career of this country, aside from its triumphs for liberty and union, none shine forth with such imperishable lustre as the acquisition of this splendid empire West of the Mississippi River, and when the impartial historian shall write up the great men and the great measures of our nation, and those who were responsible for the great acquisitions to it, he will place the name of Thomas Jefferson first and at the top of the scroll of honor.

First on Scroll of Honor.

"Massachusetts gladly shares with Virginia the honor and great distinction of having furnished the first American explorers and the first American settlers for this magnificent country, the present empire of the great Northwest.

"The great perilous questions which confront the American people to-day are economic and industrial rather than political. They involve the harmony, regulation and equalization of social conditions. These problems will not be fully solved by legislation; they come more naturally within the realm of morals, and if at times the situation seems no nearer rendered than when we began and the future looks dark and foreboding, and chaos has displaced law and order, and the passions of men have driven out calm and rational judgment, and radicalism seems rampant over rational sense, if the outlook and the outcome at times appear uncertain and above and beyond the grasp of human ingenuity for practical solution, let us remember that 'there is a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will.' And for relief and comfort let us go back to the scenes enacted at Bunker Hill, the winter at Valley Forge, to the time when the [illegible] itself hung trembling in the balance, to the time when brothers were arrayed against brothers and divided into hostile camps, and console ourselves with the remembrance and the blessed thought that all in the end culminated in peace and for the preservation and perpetuation of the republic."

TWELVE STUDENTS ARE ORDAINED AT ST. JOHN'S

Ordination Services Are Performed by Bishop Brady, Assisted by Very Rev. Dr. Maher, President of Seminary

Bishop John J. Brady officiated at the ordination yesterday at the St. John's Diocesan Seminary in Brighton of twelve ecclesiastical students of the Catholic archdiocese of Boston. Those who were ordained to holy orders were: Deacon, for the archdiocese of Boston, William J. O'Connell; for the diocese of [illegible], Daniel J. O'Connor.

Minor orders for the archdiocese of Boston, John P. Ryan, William J. Clarke, Edward J. Hackett, Jeremiah J. Herlihy, Fabian O'Connell, Henry J. Ryan, Joseph C. Walsh; for the diocese of Hartford, Ct., William F. O'Dell.

Bishop Brady was assisted, as celebrating prelate, by the Very Rev. Dr. [illegible] Maher, S. S., president of the seminary, and the Rev. Dr. Heavey of the theological school faculty. The Rev. John B. Peterson acted as master of ceremonies.

SUSPENDED TRUST COMPANY TO PAY IN FULL.

Merchants' Trust Announces Sale of Securities That Will Make Settlement Possible Almost Immediately

New York, June 17.—The result of the meeting of the directors of the suspended Merchants' Trust Company to-day is announced by W. B. Ellison, counsel for the board, as follows:

"A proposition to purchase the Hudson Valley Railway securities was accepted at a price which, added to the cash on hand and readily convertible securities, such as New York city bonds, will enable the receivers to almost immediately pay off the depositors in full.

"There will be left the Vermont securities and other collateral, which the directors think with a little care will prove quite sufficient to more than pay off the capital stock at par, if not a figure substantially equivalent to that which the stockholders paid for their stock."

The charge that the directors of the company "made loans outside the law," which is made in a suit brought against the board of directors by State Bank Examiner Kilburn, is denied in an answer to the suit filed by the defendants.

BECOMES SENIOR OFFICER.

Reasons of Gov. Bell Not Sustained by Canvass.

STATE ASKS NOT DEATH OF WOMAN

Members Declare That They Favor Commutation of Her Sentence.

The Legislature of Vermont, which voted in favor of the execution of Mary Rogers, has, according to a poll taken by the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, changed its mind, and if a special session of the body were called, the woman who is to die next Friday on the scaffold would receive a commutation of sentence.

In view of the confession of Perham, which was made since the last Legislature considered the question, the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN thought it advisable to interview the members, who voted on this question absolutely in the dark so far as the real facts of the case were concerned.

[illegible] Further than this, Dr. McWayne has testified that Mary Rogers was insane two days before the murder of her husband. [illegible] BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN [illegible]

This is the question that was submitted to each of the members of the former Legislature who voted on the question:

Thirty-nine Declared in Favor of Commutation

Do you favor the [illegible] of Mary Rogers [illegible] Legislature of Vermont [illegible], in view of Perham's confession that he testified as he did to save his own neck and the further evidence of Dr. McWayne that Mrs. Rogers was insane two days before the murder of her husband? These facts were not before the Legislature at the last session.

Of the members of the Legislature to whom these queries were addressed sixty-two responded. Of this number thirty-nine were in favor of the commutation of sentence. Eighteen were opposed. Five were non-committal.

It is understood that Governor Bell has declared that if he were assured that it was the sentiment of the members of the Legislature that he should commute the sentence of Mary Rogers he would do so.

It is hardly [illegible] that [illegible] members of the last body before whom the case came, even in the light of the startling new facts that have been established since they considered the case, would write the Governor in reference to it.

But out of sixty-two persons who responded to the query of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN, thirty-nine—more than half—came out boldly and declared that in the light of the new facts they were in favor of a commutation of the death sentence.

Save Life of the Woman Sentiment of the State

Governor Bell [illegible] that it is his [illegible] that [illegible] of the men and women of the Green Mountain State [illegible] favor [illegible] Mary Rogers.

The facts that the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN [illegible] the members [illegible] by more than two to [illegible] of saving the life of the woman.

[illegible] poll of the Legislature [illegible] the nearest to showing the true sentiment of the people of anything that has been [illegible] since the unfortunate woman was condemned to [illegible].

What it shows is that the people of the State of Vermont are human beings, and that in the light of the testimony of Perham and Dr. McWayne they are willing to waive any previous conviction that they may have held and are now emphatically against hanging this woman on next Friday.

Some of the members of the Legislature in response to [illegible] question took [illegible] the reason for [illegible] statements was that the sentiment of [illegible] community [illegible] favor of the commutation of the sentence.

Majority Is Outspoken Against the Hanging

[illegible] some of the comments that were made by the members of the Legislature who were questioned on this vital subject:

EMERY PARADEE, Grand Isle.
I will not consent to the hanging of anybody. I would rather see Mary Rogers held in prison until the next Legislature convenes in 1906. I would favor the commutation of Mrs. Rogers's sentence.

JOHN B. HUTCHINSON, Braintree.
The records will show that I voted to [illegible] Mrs. Rogers [illegible] I [illegible] Mrs. Rogers [illegible] the next Legislature [illegible]. I will also now state that the [illegible] of the citizens in my town are with me in wishing for a change of sentence to life imprisonment.

M[illegible] HUTCHINS, Stannard.

[illegible] FORD [illegible]

THE ONLY MAN WHO CAN SAVE VERMONT FROM THE HORROR OF KILLING A WOMAN

GOV. CHARLES J. BELL.
His Address Is East Hardwick, Vt.

> And earthly power doth then show likest God's when mercy seasons justice.—MERCHANT OF VENICE.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY.

By Morton B. Birge.

It developed at a trial in Middlebury, Vermont, that Ketcham, the bank wrecker, has had another prisoner for valet

HAVE we said Vermont was cruel, that our Sister was too stern,
That her justice was barbaric? Now our sad mistake we learn.
Pardon grant us, gentle Sister. Harsh we judged you ere we knew
That your milk of human kindness still flows freely where it's due.

WHILE we harped in tiresome chorus on this petty hanging case,
Now, abashed, we kneel before you, under your contempt we quail,
Since we learned that Banker Ketchum has a valet in his jail.

SEVEN years is Ketchum serving. But, lest mercy's part should fail,
They assuage a felon's sorrow—put a valet in his jail

But we must, in common fairness, cease our futile, foolish wail

To Charles J. Bell, Governor of Vermont

You are mistaken

The AMERICAN has canvassed the Legislature which voted against commuting Mrs. Rogers's sentence to life imprisonment. This canvass shows that the new developments in the case have caused a change in the sentiment of the people. The members of the Legislature who have replied to the AMERICAN'S queries declare two to one that they would now vote against hanging.

In several instances the legislators avow that their attitude is based upon the fact that the people in their community are opposed to the execution of Mrs. Rogers.

Whose law?

A law made by men—A LAW IN WHICH NO WOMAN HAD A VOICE.

It is an insult to the women of Vermont to declare that they want one of their number, however guilty, killed under such circumstances.

The law, merciful Governor, will not be violated if you reprieve this woman until the next Legislature shall have had a chance to take the action foreshown by the AMERICAN'S poll.

The law will still be vindicated if Mary Rogers is imprisoned for life.

You alone can save New England from the mediaeval spectacle of men deliberately and with shuddering preparation taking from a woman the life which God gave her

GALE DIVORCE SUIT STIRS SOCIETY IN CAMBRIDGE.

Ezra T. Gale, Accused by His Wife of Intoxication and Excessive Use of Drugs, Is the Son of a Millionaire

Suit for divorce on the ground of gross and confirmed habits of intoxication and the excessive use of opium and other drugs has been brought by Mrs. Florence A. Gale, daughter of George C. Closs, the wealthy retired candy manufacturer of Cambridge, against Ezra T. Gale, a member of the George W. Gale Lumber Company of Cambridge. Both husband and wife have for years been leaders in Cambridge society and the filing of the libel has created much comment.

Mr. Gale is not in Cambridge. None of his relatives professes to know where he is. Mrs. Gale has left Cambridge and is now with her brother in Barre, Vt.

At the home of George W. Gale, No. 30 Williston road, Brookline, father of Ezra T. Gale, no definite information as to where the son is could be ascertained. Mr. Gale was at the Revere House Monday night. He left there Tuesday and gave no information as to where he was going.

The Gales formerly lived at No. [illegible] Broadway, Cambridge. Some months ago they broke up their home and Mrs. Gale went to live with her father and sister at No. 380 Broadway. Mr. Gale started on a trip to South America three months ago.

The couple were married November [illegible] 1895. Mr. Gale's father is reputed to be a millionaire.

GERMANS IN FRANCE MUST BE READY TO GO HOME.

Business Men Ordered to Be Prepared to Return to the Fatherland at a Moment's Notice by the Government

Paris, June 18.—It is stated in official quarters here that the Government has been advised that German business men in France have been ordered by the German Government to hold themselves in readiness to return to Germany at a moment's notice.

Despite the reassuring advices from Berlin, it is believed here that the Moroccan situation has brought about a state of affairs that menaces the peace of Europe more than in a quarter of a century before.

This is admitted by the newspapers, but [illegible] will be averted.

It has just developed that the [illegible] England that would have plunged the nation into immediate war with Germany.

Had the proposed treaty been approved by the Cabinet, according to a letter from the French Ambassador at Rome, German troops would have crossed the frontier the same night.

POLICE SEIZE $3,000 WORTH OF LIQUOR AT NANTASKET.

Plymouth County police celebrated the seventeenth of June by [illegible] at Nantasket and seizing beer and liquor valued at $3,000. The crowd, which is said to have broken [illegible] records for several years, had trouble in gratifying thirst. When men complained to the police, they were told that the ocean was still cool and wet. What irritated thirsty Bostonians was the fact that champagne was not seized by the officers.

"That stuff ain't liquor," said an officer who tasted the wine. "It's [illegible] and the law don't touch it."

Six hundred bottles of beer were gathered in and all the ale, whiskey, gin and other spirituous liquors that came within the official grasp. The officers were armed with a bench warrant.

The crowd taxed transportation facilities. Trolley cars could not make schedule time and boats were late, while connections between the two were irregular.

BOY SAVES FRIEND BUT IS DROWNED HIMSELF.

Special to the Sunday American.

Northampton, June 17.—Twelve-year-old James Maloney, Jr., was drowned in Paradise Pond, Smith College grounds, today after saving from drowning his 14-year-old companion, William Lyons.

Maloney, who was the son of City Messenger James Maloney, was boating with Lyons. The latter, who is learning to swim, dived from the boat, was seized with cramps and was in imminent danger of drowning.

Maloney threw him an oar and jumped into the water himself. He held Lyons up, swam back to the boat with him and lifted him up till he climbed over the side. Just as Lyons turned to help Maloney in the latter, exhausted by his efforts, sank. His body was recovered later.

NEWFOUNDLAND DOG SAVES CHILD'S LIFE

Green Bay, Wis., June 17.—While playing on the edge of a brook roaring through his father's farm, Peter Burkah, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Burkah, slipped and fell into the water head first and would have drowned only for a faithful Newfoundland dog, the child's constant companion.

The dog grabbed the clothes of the child in his mouth and pulled him to a place of safety.

BOYS SEIZE CIRCUS; GIVE THEIR OWN SHOW

Chicago, June 17.—Under the stimulus of a purple costume worn by a woman bareback rider and supposing it worn in honor of the university colors, more than 100 Northwestern students took possession of a circus in Evanston.

After stopping the performance and giving a show of their own the collegians fought with the tent men and were dispersed by the police. Several persons were injured, but no arrests were made.

WELLESLEY GIRLS IN "MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING."

Shakespeare's comedy "Much Ado About Nothing" was produced last evening at Wellesley College by the college girls. It was an open-air performance, and despite the threatening aspect of the weather, the entertainment was given as first planned and with great success.

MINER BLOWN TO PIECES.

ASHLAND, Pa., June 17.—By an explosion of dynamite at this colliery to-day, Charles Reilly, of Byrnesville, was torn to pieces. The cause of the accident is involved in mystery, as he was alone in a chute at the time.

STOKES WILL WED MISS PASTOR ON JULY 18.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

New York, June 17.—James Graham Phelps Stokes, the young millionaire philanthropist, and Miss Rose Pastor, Ghetto girl and former cigarmaker, arrived in New York this afternoon from Noroton, Ct., where they had been visiting Mr. Stokes's mother at her country home, "Brick House." Mr. Stokes stated positively that they would be married on July 18.

"Miss Pastor and I will be married on July 18," said Mr. Stokes, smiling. "The ceremony will be performed in Noroton, but not at Brick House. We will have a family gathering there afterward. That is all I care to say about it now, except that we will make our home on the East Side, close to the people we care for."

The ceremony will be very simple. Miss Pastor's wedding dress cost less than $40.

GOVERNOR BELL WANTS HANGING TO BE SECRET

By J. Frank Davis.

Windsor, Vt., June 17.—Governor Bell desires that the hanging of Mary Rogers, which he has refused to stop, shall be as nearly secret as the law of Vermont will allow.

He has called Sheriff Henry H. Peck's attention to [illegible] of the Vermont statutes, which reads as follows:

The Sheriff [illegible] the warrant is issued [illegible] present at the place of execution [illegible] physician [illegible] and also two deputies [illegible] by him. He shall [illegible] the State's Attorney of the county [illegible] as he deems [illegible] AND NO OTHERS.

[illegible] a dead letter on the statute [illegible] forty years [illegible] ago it was decided [illegible] the good of the newspapers [illegible] should be given [illegible] there have been [illegible] witnesses of every [illegible]

"Realizes He Has Gone Too Far."

It has been said by the Governor that he thinks [illegible] Vermont news [illegible] or in a town near [illegible] the [illegible] indignation [illegible] those who have [illegible] it was that he [illegible] on the part of the State of Vermont.

If he can prevent the publication of the [illegible] in Vermont [illegible] he would not suffer [illegible] from the aftermath [illegible]

May Bar Newspaper Men.

"[illegible] called my attention to this old law," Sheriff Peck admitted to-day [illegible] in the [illegible] the matter. Of course [illegible] orders [illegible] I must do it because [illegible] It has never been [illegible]

[illegible] larger [illegible] the State ones. [illegible] is prepared to do his duty. He [illegible] otherwise. Some of the [illegible] five months of a [illegible] newspapers [illegible] Mrs. Rogers [illegible] duty [illegible] others have attacked him bitterly during the past week—in every case for a matter the responsibility for which rested in no wise upon him but upon the State's Attorney of Windsor County.

The Sheriff has been seriously criticized because [illegible] of the fact that [illegible] not prepared [illegible] iff of the [illegible] might be.

Governor to Be Responsible.

"I do not believe in the legal taking of human life," he has said, "I think [illegible] should be sent to State Prison [illegible] life, with no pardoning power anywhere, except in the event of their innocence being proven."

This modern trend of thought, being out of tune with some of the prejudices of [illegible] of the people of Vermont, has been sufficient to secure for Mr. Peck some unpleasant attacks.

[illegible] citizens of the county believe in the Sheriff and may be depended to line up with him as against the Governor or any other opponent who made an issue with him over this matter of the hanging of a woman.

As a Woodstock man said a day or so ago, "The law requires Sheriff Peck to hang Mary Rogers if the Governor won't do anything, but it doesn't require him to like the job."

Sheriff Peck realizes as does every other opponent of capital punishment that nothing [illegible] toward its abolition [illegible] regarding the executions. If [illegible] parent [illegible] take the hanging [illegible] as possible his orders will be [illegible] perforce; it will be the responsibility of the Governor, however, and not of the Sheriff.

THE MAN WHO WILL HANG MRS. MARY ROGERS AND THE NOOSE WHICH HE HAS TIED FOR HER

Question Submitted to Legislative Members

Do you favor the reprieve of Mrs. Mary Rogers until the next Legislature of Vermont meets, in view of Perham's confession that he testified as he did to save his own neck, and the further evidence of Dr. McIlwayne that Mrs. Rogers was insane two days before the murder of her husband? These facts were not before the Legislature at the last session.

Will you please answer immediately?

LOVELL--MAN WHO FIXES THE NOOSE

Windsor, Vt., June 17.—"There's one good thing about it. If 'Wilse' Lovell does the hanging it will be well done. He's hung enough to know how, and he's got sand enough not to get shaky at the last minute."

Not one person, but dozens have I heard say this during my several trips to Windsor, each time preceding an expected execution of Mrs. Rogers.

Just who it is that does the hanging is quite a question, in view of [illegible] responsibility at [illegible] The sheriff is the [illegible] hangman. But there are several things to be done that the proceeding may run smoothly. Springing the trap is the last one of them—and the easiest. Binding the prisoner is one of the unpleasant ones. Fixing the noose is the most [illegible] of it, and the portion of the work [illegible] careful [illegible]

Sheriff More Than 30 Years.

Wilson H. Lovell [illegible] the noose that now suspends from the black cross arm of the gallows in the west wing of Windsor State Prison, and who tested the rope will undoubtedly be the man to place it around Mary Rogers' neck.

Southern Vermont, which knows Wilson H. Lovell very well, is glad of that, for even the people whose hearts are of [illegible] not [illegible] of making an ex[illegible] a torture chamber.

Mr. Lovell is a familiar figure throughout Windsor County, for he was sheriff of it for upward of thirty years. That is how it comes that he knows so much about hangings. He has participated in six or seven executions. He has [illegible] killed in Vermont thirteen years ago, and the last woman ten years before that.

Now he is superintendent of the State Prison, having been appointed a couple of months ago, after the house cleaning of that institution that swept away all the chief officials and most of the subordinates.

Guards in New Uniforms.

His is a familiar figure outside the [illegible] Early in the morning he is about superintending the care of the stable, the starting of the squad of men that work on the prison farm and the other routine work of the institution. Many times during the day he can be seen walking from his house to the great, bleak buildings, or standing on the lawns surveying with watchful eye the men who clean the [illegible]

Something of a dictator is Mr. Lovell [illegible] took charge [illegible] in spotless uniforms. There was [illegible] dust and moth to corrupt in many spots in the prison; to-day it all shines as if it had just been washed, which it usually has. The prison, inside and out, is scrubbed and painted and cleaned for all the world like a ship.

Is Not Without Enemies.

During the past fortnight painters, convicts in their two-colored suits, red on the [illegible] the right of a vertical [illegible] crowns to their feet [illegible] been at work on the front of the [illegible] and to-day the sashes of all the windows are a dazzling white and the bars before them a glistening black. The lawns in front are as green as emerald and as smooth as [illegible] Leaves and sticks on [illegible] the Vermont State prison [illegible] pretty place, and a well and economically kept one.

In personal appearance he is as military as [illegible] Tall—close to six feet—slim, upright, with ruddy, pleasant face, well trained white mustache and pleasant eyes and with spotless, well-fitting clothes, he is the kind of man you look to see in [illegible] If he lived south of the M[illegible] line he would be dubbed [illegible] I've had all I could [illegible] known him.

Thirty years as sheriff—which means thirty years in active politics—makes the best men enemies, and Wilson Lovell is not without his. Some of them are undoubtedly actuated by fine intentions; some of them that I have seen are enemies of whom a man might well be proud. But the bitterest of them do not question the man's courage and 'nerve.'"

Strict Discipline His Pride.

That is why even the hardest hearted Vermonters were pleased to learn that the noose will be fixed by him.

I saw Mr. Lovell leading a chase for a prisoner who escaped from some outside work he was doing, a week ago, and his face was set and stern, with long hard lines in it. It was the face of the man who would shoot—and shoot to kill—without compunction, if necessity arose in his duties.

The good appearance and strict discipline of the prison is his pride, but those grandchildren are [illegible] two of them—a boy of about seven and a girl a year or so younger—live a block or so from the prison. They show [illegible] the institution a great many times a day, because they have to come over to show everything they have to grandpa. They are mighty bright children [illegible] He starts to smile when one of them comes in sight. The expression seldom leaves his face while one of them is around.

The State That Kills.

"Wilse" Lovell is one kind of a typical Vermonter—a different kind from Governor Bell. They say of the Governor [illegible] is a just man, but stern—and set. Of Lovell they say: "He is just, but merciful."

I believe Mr. Lovell would give many dollars to have the duty of [illegible] Mary Rogers out of his [illegible] to another as he well [illegible] for since he became superintendent of the prison it is no longer necessary, as when he was a deputy sheriff, that he should participate in the execution. But he knows he can probably do it more quickly and mercifully than any other man in the State.

He tied the knot away back in last January, and it has never been untied. It is a complicated knot, with nine turns in it, and a loop through which passes the end of the rope for security. He tested it again a week ago. He will test it again early next week.

Next Friday he will place it around Mary Rogers's neck, I believe, without a tremor. He will be as cool as ice, and so far as lies in his power, he will be merciful.

"The officials do not kill her," he said one day, "it is the State of Vermont."

SHERIFF PLANS DISPOSAL OF BODY

Special to the Sunday American.

Windsor, Vt., June 17.—While Mrs. Mary Mabel Rogers wrote farewell letters to-day the most gruesome of all the preparations for her execution were made. Sheriff Peck came to Windsor and arranged for the disposition of her dead body.

It is a thing to strike one with horror—this arrangement with an undertaker to prepare for burial the body of a young woman who to-day is in full bloom of good health. The Sheriff himself was affected by it, yet it was a necessary part of his preparation.

It had to be done to-day, because there [illegible] of duties for Sheriff [illegible] The County Court at Woodstock [illegible] The criminal case [illegible] on Monday. He has on that day to [illegible] to bring an insane person to the court. On Tuesday he has an appointment to meet Governor Bell, [illegible] with him the arrangements [illegible]

On Wednesday he will again be at Woodstock. Thursday he plans to come [illegible] and Friday is the day for the [illegible]

Sheriff Did Not See Her.

Sheriff Peck came on an early train in the morning and got away in the afternoon. He went to the prison and had a long talk with Superintendent Lovell over the execution plans. He did not call upon Mary Rogers. She did not even know he was in the prison. There is no call for [illegible] before Friday, unless another reprieve should come, a circumstance [illegible] looking forward to.

When the last reprieve was granted the sheriff left a copy of the document [illegible] She [illegible] to read whenever [illegible] Whether she has perused it more than once neither Miss Durgin, prison matron, who is acting as night death watch, nor Miss Tuxbury, who occupies the room with Mrs. Rogers days, will say. But she knows its contents well. She knows that it extends her life to next Friday, and to next Friday only, unless another reprieve or some kind of court [illegible] intervenes. There is nothing [illegible] for Sheriff Peck to tell her.

Never Knew of Writ of Error.

Some criticism of the officials has been heard in various places in Vermont for not informing her that her application for a writ of error had been refused. This was ill-advised. There is no need of relieving her mind on this score, for she has never known that any petition was filed. Her attorneys have not consulted with her regarding the details of the fight they have made for her life. They have not considered she could help them any.

After the Sheriff had seen that the gallows was in position, and talked with the superintendent and Deputy-Sheriff Kinley regarding some of the minor details of the execution, he called upon Undertaker Lyman Cabot and arranged with him to take the body immediately after the hanging.

Mr. Cabot will prepare the body for burial, according to to-day's arrangements, [illegible] it decently, and be prepared to dispose [illegible] with such orders [illegible] then receive.

In February it was arranged that Mrs. Johanna Callahan, Mary Rogers's mother, [illegible] the body and an undertaker was to come from her home in Hoosick Falls, N. Y., to get the body on the day of the hanging. Sheriff Peck has not yet heard whether this will be the case now. If it is Undertaker Cabot will turn the body over to that undertaker.

Perhaps in Prison Cemetery.

If Mrs. Callahan does not [illegible] the body it will be buried in the State Prison cemetery here, a little plot where are laid the bodies of homeless, friendless criminals whose deaths occur while they are inmates of the institution.

While these arrangements for the burial of her dead body, less than a week from to-day, were being made, Mary Rogers sat in her room, under the eye of the death watch, writing. She made considerable progress with her farewell letters to-day.

No one knows, however, how many she has finished nor how many [illegible] to write, nor to whom they are addressed. The watchers do not intrude [illegible] privacy. During the entire day she spoke hardly a word.

THREE DOOMED TO HANG ON FRIDAY.

On Friday of this week the law has said that three persons shall pay the penalty for crimes that it is alleged that they committed, by being hanged until they are dead. Each one protests innocence; each one hopes that a Governor may step in before the fatal hour of ignominious execution with a saving hand [illegible] is almost certainly hopeless [illegible]

One of the doomed persons is a woman and awaits her fate in the prison at Windsor, Vt. She is Mary Rogers, accused of the murder of her husband. Her case has been discussed in the BOSTON AMERICAN and BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN in all of its phases, and more light is shed on the remarkable situation in this issue.

Two Face Gallows in Chicago.

The others, with both feet on the crumbling brink of death, are Johann Hoch and "Jocco" Briggs of Chicago. They have both been sentenced to die at the same time. Their only hope is in the clemency of Governor Deneen of Illinois, but it is not believed that the Governor of that State will be more lenient with a man [illegible] his wife than Governor Bell of Vermont with a woman for killing her husband.

Hoch's case is a very strange one. [illegible] on Friday [illegible] expects that he will [illegible] for the alleged murder of one of his thirty or forty wives, many of whom it is believed [illegible] by the police of Chicago [illegible] killed.

Arrested in New York shortly after the death of the next [illegible] wife, Hoch maintained his innocence and has steadily done so ever since. He declares that he had no show and that he is doomed to die simply because his name is Hoch.

Pupil of Murderer Holmes.

The police assert that Hoch was a pupil of the notorious Holmes, who committed many murders in Chicago, was afterward arrested in Boston and was executed in [illegible] It is charged that Hoch married women for their money and then got rid of them by killing them, if he could not do it in any other way.

No sooner did the wife next [illegible] die than he married her sister [illegible] robbed the sister and ran away. [illegible] was what led to the investigation [illegible] arrest was followed.

Briggs was sentenced to die for the murder of an aged man named [illegible] Peterson. His lawyers are doing everything possible to save him, but it is not [illegible] Governor will interfere [illegible] than in that of Hoch.

Briggs was identified as a man who was seen with Peterson at [illegible] Many other witnesses [illegible] but it did no good.

Motives in the Three Cases.

Infatuation for another man is said to have prompted Mary Rogers to get her husband out of the way. In the case of Hoch, if he did it [illegible] the seventh of the third person in this trio of creatures who face death. This is what the father of young Briggs says:

"My boy Joe is innocent of this awful crime. Joey is a good boy naturally, good and kind. Drink and bad companions and too great a willingness to float are the things which gave him a bad name, so that when he was arrested for this murder the police were able to fix this crime upon him, even though he was innocent.

"The police have hounded him since his boyhood. They have [illegible] him from his bed and from his work for identification, and always [illegible] been able to prove that he was somewhere [illegible]

VERMONT WOMEN ARE OUTSPOKEN AGAINST HANGING

By Eleanor Ames.

Burlington, Vt., June 17.—"Mary Rogers would never hang if I were Governor Bell's wife" is a remark which has been daily sounded in my ears by women in all walks of life during the past week.

"The Governor is a very determined man," I have invariably replied. "He is not easily influenced."

"I'd find a way to influence him in this case" has been the inevitable retort, accompanied by a flash of the eye and a snap of jaws which meant business.

I have discussed the Rogers case with at least fifty Vermont women. I have found but three who were in favor of the execution. The others shudder with horror and burn with indignation at the mere mention of it.

Naturally not one woman condones her [illegible] They revolt at the [illegible] of its treachery and fiendishness, but [illegible] with the keenness of a woman's [illegible] they all [illegible] that no sane woman ever committed such a deed.

"She must have been crazy," is the universal verdict.

Horrified at the Idea.

Across the writing table in the Van Ness House I chatted with a clever little woman whose husband is a prominent doctor.

"It makes me positively ill every time I think of it," she said, "and my husband feels the same way. When the last date was set he was given a [illegible] present. Why, he said nothing [illegible] to go. He was horrified at the idea of [illegible]

"I have never [illegible] any opinion except what [illegible] the execution. Few women believe in capital punishment, anyway, I find."

"Hasn't he brains enough to know that the law bears several interpretations?" she asked indignantly. "I've no patience with pig-headed people. It's lucky that he is not running for Governor again. I believe my husband voted for him [illegible] but I'm sure he never will again [illegible] office he tries for. And I'm a Republican, too."

"If they really want to punish her, then let them imprison her for life. Hanging punishes those who carry it out more than it does the one who is hanged," is the view a pretty saleswoman in a Burlington store took of it.

"I have prayed for Mrs. Rogers every night for a year," declared a sweet faced, gray haired woman from Brattleboro whom I met on the train, "and now I'm praying for Governor Bell," she added.

One of the bright and shining lights of Morrisville's Woman's Club, a most progressive organization, by the way, and of great municipal service, grew dramatic in her intensity.

"I am far more sorry for Governor Bell and the sheriffs than I am for Mrs. Rogers," she declared. "With that poor creature it will be over in a few minutes and God will attend to her soul. But the others will have to live and carry to their graves the memory of this foul deed in which they had a part.

"Governor Bell may not be [illegible] but I'll venture to say that many a time in the stillness of the night he will awaken to see before him a vision of a woman mounting the gallows, then swinging to [illegible] until her body ceases to quiver and [illegible] pronounced dead.

"It will come [illegible] that he could have prevented it [illegible] He will [illegible] that he held a woman's life in his hands [illegible] laws of the State asked of him [illegible] of the gallows.

"Then the Sheriffs [illegible] does the deed [illegible] fact that he was acting under orders will not give him rest and comfort and satisfaction.

"Don't ask me to talk any more about it. I am keyed to concert pitch now."

"The Governor's a good man and kind," she said, "but I can't understand why he [illegible] this woman's death. It may [illegible] the law to let her live, but what's the use in havin' such laws? [illegible]

[illegible] ised that Mrs. Bell lets him [illegible] a real good woman and a kind [illegible] was [illegible] his bein' [illegible] 'I hugged her a little.' [illegible]

There is prison near serving a life sentence a man who has [illegible] literally to [illegible] He [illegible] town [illegible] neighbors knew him. Yet the [illegible] in his case as to let [illegible] death penalty.

BLOODLESS SURGERY IN THE TREATMENT OF CANCER AND TUMORS

The wonderful results that I have obtained by my absorption method of treating Cancers and Tumors has attracted the attention of thousands of persons—patients, friends and doctors as well. I treat and cure Cancers and Tumors in any form without the knife, without pain or loss of blood, and have certainly demonstrated that my method of bloodless surgery is positive in its results. Hundreds have been treated, both at their homes and at my office and private sanatorium, with the most gratifying results. Patients given up to die by their family physicians have been advised to try my treatment, and they are well and strong today as the result. No Cancer so small or Tumor so large but that my remedies will reach it and eventually cure it. Surgical operations are dangerous, painful and useless. Did you ever know a Cancer patient that was operated upon that ever got well? They all come back in time, and always in a worse form. The shock of the operation lowers the patient's vitality, robs him of a large amount of blood and weakens his natural powers of resistance. No surgeon will take a case for operation and promise a cure. If he has no faith himself, how can he expect to inspire confidence in his patient?

Our method is just the reverse. There is no shock, no pain, no loss of blood, no anæsthetic. We build up the system by a careful course of treatment, increase the natural powers of the body, increase the strength and vitality, and assist nature in destroying the disease germs.

We have faith in our treatment and can promise [illegible] Bloodless surgery is the only [illegible] Cancer or Tumor [illegible] patients. Call on or write them, satisfy yourself of the success of this treatment and come to me at once to be cured.

BY A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Boston won the afternoon game by the skin of its teeth, 6 to 5, after losing the morning game, 7 to 2. The last session had a regular Kilkenny ending and Pitcher Killian was put out of the game for kicking. Manager Armour and Catcher Drill were put off the grounds, and for a time it looked as though the Detroit players would commit assault and battery on Umpire O'Loughlin.

One was carried back to the old days of Anson and Johnny Ward and "Scrappy" Bill Joyce, when riots, with the umpire as the storm centre, were of daily occurrence.

The game was a tie, 5 to 5, when the Champs came to bat for the last half of the ninth. Parent, the first man up, banged a short fly between centre and right field. Dick Cooley came in on a dead run and, sticking down his gloved hand, caught the ball a foot and a half from the ground—at least, that is the way I saw the play. Parent evidently thought Cooley caught the ball, for he left first base and began walking back to the bench. Selbach, who was coaching, ran across the field and made Parent go back to first. O'Loughlin, who was walking back to the pitcher's box from second base, motioned that Parent was safe, ruling that Cooley had made a pickup of the fly.

Instantly the Detroit players made a rush at the umpire and protested violently. Killian lost his temper completely and was sent to the bench. It looked as though the entire team would be ruled off, for they persisted in continuing the argument. O'Loughlin pulled his watch and took his position behind the plate and after a while Mullin went in to pitch for the Tigers. Manager Armour kept up a running fire of talk from the bench and the umpire made him get off the grounds. Drill, the catcher, was also banished.

When quiet was restored Parent stole second. Burkett struck out, but Parent got around to third on Stahl's out, Schaefer to Hickman. It all depended on Grimshaw and he responded to the appeals of the throng by placing a fly in short left which Lowe was unable to reach and Parent raced home with the winning run.

Sensational Game.

It was by all odds the most sensational game played on the Huntington Avenue grounds this season. After apparently having the game as good as won in the early stages, Tannehill had a bad inning, filling the bases on a hit, a sacrifice, a hit by a pitched ball and a base on balls, only to have them cleared by a terrific home run drive by old Sam Crawford.

This put the Champs one run to the bad and they didn't catch up until the eighth inning, although Burkett led off with a fine triple in the fifth, but didn't get any farther, as none of the men who followed could send him home.

The Bostons hit the ball hard enough to win half a dozen ordinary games, but sensational catches by Bobbie Lowe, Cooley and Schaefer robbed them of many a safe hit. Except in the fifth inning Tannehill pitched good ball, keeping the hits well scattered. Stahl, Collins and Ferris played star games for Boston and Criger caught in his usual artistic manner.

Champs Begin Well.

Although O'Leary, the first man up, opened with a single over Parent's head he couldn't complete the circuit, as Cooley fanned, Hickman flied to Collins, a marvellous catch on the left field foul line, and Crawford went out on a grounder to Captain Jim.

The Champs started out by scoring three runs. With Selbach disposed of, Parent got a life on O'Leary's wide throw to first. Burkett [illegible] to right and Parent made third. [illegible] a sharp grounder to Hickman, but Parent slid to the plate under the throw to catch him. Grimshaw was hit and the bases were full. Collins whacked a safe one over [illegible] and Stahl. Ferris [illegible] to Schaefer and [illegible] to [illegible].

In the second the Tigers scored [illegible] Coughlin [illegible] base [illegible] bunt and a double play. [illegible] Selbach was hit, but was forced by Parent and Burkett flied to Crawford.

Scored on Ferris's Triple.

With two out, Hickman singled, but was out trying to steal. In Boston's half, Collins singled after two were out, and was brought home by Ferris's slashing triple to left field bleachers.

Coughlin singled in the fourth with one down, but the next two men were easy outs. Boston went out one, two, three in order.

Detroit did business in the fifth. Doran started the trouble with a clean single to centre. Killian sacrificed. O'Leary was hit by a pitched ball and Cooley was out, Tannehill to Grimshaw. Hickman walked and the bases were full. Then Crawford swatted the ball far over Stahl's head and the diamond looked like a merry-go-round. When things settled down after four men had crossed the plate the bases looked as deserted as last-years' birds' nests.

Tannehill then filled them up again by issuing passes to Coughlin, Schaefer and Lowe in succession, but Doran ended the agony by giving Collins an easy grounder.

Led Off with Three-bagger.

In Boston's half Burkett led off with a three-bagger, but Stahl fouled to Coughlin, Schaefer threw out Grimshaw and Collins was purposely walked. Ferris tried hard, but Schaefer made a circus catch of Ferris's fly [illegible] first base. It was a clear case of robbery.

It was one two three order for both sides in the sixth, but Lowe's great running catch off Criger and Tannehill were what kept Boston from scoring.

In the seventh, with one out, Parent messed Crawford's grounder and Coughlin followed with a single, but the next two men flied to the outfield. Stahl got in a single with two down, but Grimshaw forced him on a weak hit to O'Leary.

Boston [illegible] in the eighth with a short single to centre and took second on a wild pitch, but Killian, in trying to bunt put up a [illegible] for Tannehill and Doran was doubled at second before he could get back. O'Leary then hit weakly to Ferris.

Criger's Timely Double.

In Boston's half, with Collins out of the way, Ferris got to second on Coughlin's wild throw and scored on Criger's two-bagger to right. Tannehill and Selbach each went out on easy flies to O'Leary and Schaefer.

In the ninth Ferris threw Cooley out. Hickman lined a double to left, but was out trying to stretch it. Crawford singled and Coughlin hit to Stahl. [illegible]

The Morning Game.

The morning game went to the Tigers, who bunched their hits on Dinneen in the eighth inning. Boston scored one run in the first on singles by Parent, Stahl and Grimshaw. Detroit tied it up in the fifth on an error by Grimshaw of Donovan's grounder, a steal and O'Leary's single.

In the last half of the fifth Dinneen got two bases on O'Leary's poor throw, Schaefer's error, a fielder's choice and Burkett's fly to Cooley.

Cooley led off with a single in the eighth. Collins tried to force him on Hickman's grounder, but was too late. Dinneen fumbled Crawford's bunt, filling the bases. Parent fumbled Coughlin's grounder and Cooley scored. Schaefer singled, scoring Hickman and Crawford. Dinneen threw out Lowe, but the runners advanced, and both scored on Drill's single. In the ninth Crawford knocked out a home run to centre.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

President Taylor said after the game: "I saw Cooley catch that ball nearly two feet from the ground. We don't want to win games on umpire's mistakes. I think O'Loughlin's decisions have been awful this series. I wrote to President Johnson [illegible] before yesterday about him and shall write to [illegible] to-night."

After Drill had been banished he sneaked back to [illegible] but O'Loughlin spotted him and chased him again.

The [illegible] man was out for the afternoon game. Mullin was the lucky piece.

In the [illegible] hit a ball to left that looked fair, but O'Loughlin called it a foul. [illegible] had headed the ball over Grimshaw's head and Crawford had scored and [illegible] was on third before the [illegible] made his decision. [illegible] didn't kick [illegible], no.

When the umpire was calling good strikes balls Collins yelled at him: "What are you trying to do, make this game a farce?"

That catch (or pickup) of Cooley's in the ninth and all the spectators [illegible] too. It was the talk of the town last night.

Hard luck for Burkett to lead off with a three-bagger in the fifth and then have to die on third.

[illegible] has been batting well lately, but he drove in the winning run and also scored a tally with his single in the [illegible] inning.

Big Bill got well bumped in the eighth inning of the morning game. There was some dopy [illegible] that came to help [illegible].

[illegible] have runs both morning and afternoon. The ball was hit to about the same place each time.

The Boston players left for New Bedford last night. They will spend Sunday fishing in Buzzards Bay and on Monday play the New Bedford team of the New England League an exhibition game.

Good-by, Detroit. You were very unkind to us this [illegible].

ATHLETICS, 3; ST. LOUIS, 1

American League Grounds, Philadelphia, June 17.—The Athletics trounced St. Louis this afternoon before a big holiday crowd by the score of 3 to 1. The Athletics' three runs were made in as many innings on the bunching of three pairs of hits, helped along with one fumble on the part of Stone in left field.

Outside of the victory itself, the feature was the one run made by St. Louis, a homer by Stone, the ball [illegible] over the fence in almost the same spot as his other [illegible] two days ago. The score:

DR. WELD WON AT B. A. A. TRAPS

Defeated Dr. Gleason by Three Birds for Championship of the Club.

Waltham, June 17.—An all-day shoot was held to-day at the range of the B. A. A. Gun Club, and a large field was out. The shooting was very close and resulted in several ties. In the first event, a hundred bird handicap, Owen and Dickey were tied, and in the shoot-off Owen won with a total of 49 out of a possible 50. A silver cup was the prize in this event.

A tie also occurred for third money, Moore, Austin and Adams having 94 each. Adams won the shoot-off with a score of 49½.

In the afternoon the annual shoot for the championship of the club took place, ten shots entering. The conditions of the contest were that each man should shoot at three different angles. As a result of these conditions only five finished the match, and it developed into a contest between Dr. Weld and Dr. Gleason. Dr. Weld finally won with 139 out of a possible 150, Dr. Gleason being beaten by three birds. The summary:

The members of the association will remain over to-day as guests of the Medford Boat Club.

YALE OARSMEN LOOK FOR EASY VICTORY ON THE THAMES.

Eli's Shell, Although Not So Fast as Last Year on Paper, Appear to Be Far Superior to the Crimson Varsity Crew

Yale Crew Quarters, Gales Ferry, Conn., June 17.—With the Yale and Harvard crews entering on their first full week on the Thames [illegible] safe on the [illegible] which is scheduled for [illegible] Yale's eight can hardly round into the form shown by the crew of a year ago, although there seems to be no reason to doubt that it should have a walkover in the four-mile race with Harvard.

There seems no good reason why the Yale crew should have slowed down, for six of the oarsmen are the same as those who sat the benches a year ago and the two new comers, Chase and Kineon, are finished and strong oars. But the incentive of persistently hard training was removed by the reports of Harvard's [illegible] condition and the eight has seemingly [illegible] slowed down in its work. The coming week, which [illegible] rows during the practice period, here is reckoned sure to mark an improvement, but it is a long distance to the speed possibilities of the eight of a year ago.

Time Rows for Yale.

It is doubted by many here whether the time row over the four miles made by the Yale eight the night after it arrived here, amounting to twenty minutes fifty seconds, will be bettered while the crew stays here, and remarkably fast weather conditions are now given much of the credit for the time. The eight will go the full distance once more, perhaps twice, before Coach John Kennedy stops sending his men the limit and gradually cuts down the daily rows.

No changes are expected in the eight. No better men can be found in the University than those on the benches and all that they need is keeping up for their grand struggle, now only ten days distant.

It is a significant fact that while the Yale varsity are winning from the Yale freshmen [illegible] the Harvard varsity are just as regularly unable to hold their freshmen for any extended distance [illegible] that the Yale varsity will defeat the Harvard regulars. It seems hardly possible that the Yale freshmen can [illegible] their event. The Yale freshmen are not so fast an eight to-day as when they finished second in the event at the American Henley, in which they defeated the University of Pennsylvania [illegible] and [illegible] the Cornell second [illegible] More attention will be given to the [illegible] the coming week by Coach John Kennedy.

The Harvard freshmen are the special pet of their professional coach, Jim Wray, who expects to be able to demonstrate with them that his stroke is not a failure, but a thorough success, and to be enrolled as coach again next year.

Yale Fresh Crew Uncertain.

The Yale freshman eight is the only crew from New Haven which has been disturbed in its make-up since it arrived. Three places, all in the waist of the shell, No. 4, No. 5 and No. 6, are more or less in doubt.

To predict the outcome of the regatta a week in advance seems to make the outcome about a toss up in forecasting two out of the three events. Giving the varsity eight to Yale and the freshman eight to Harvard leaves the varsity four to throw the balance of numbers in the regatta. The varsity fours are quartettes picked almost exclusively at both Yale and Harvard from the freshman crews of a year ago, and this year the fours are above the average and both have two high stand and strokes.

Farley, but for an injury to his leg from which he has never recovered, would to-day be stroking the Harvard eight. Boulton, the Yale four-oared stroke, has all the elements except weight and perhaps staying powers for a stroke in a four mile race. The Harvard four has made the better time in the trials which have been rowed, but the racing distance of two miles has not yet been tackled.

With the race Yale closes the first year of a new regime in her rowing policy. For the first time John A. Kennedy, the veteran professional, has here is sole charge of the Yale crews. There is no young alumnus who has the term "head coach" as there has been in every former year that Yale has been here, as Captain Walter Cross, the captain of last year's crew, declined to return in that capacity this Spring.

ROW OVER MOTOR RACE AT CHARLES RIVER PARK.

Stinson's Pacing Machine Gives Out, and Metting Refuses to Allow Him to Use Another, So Contest Is Off

There was all kinds of trouble at the Charles River bike track yesterday afternoon in the [illegible] event between Will Stinson and Louis Metting because a motor went wrong early in the race.

Because of the smallness of the home [illegible] the distance was cut down to fifteen miles and the men [illegible] away. They had gone a mile and a half when Stinson's motor gave out [illegible] wait at [illegible] was not going [illegible] gallon.

Western Turfmen Give Sheepshead Bookmakers a Hard Shock When Geranium Wins the Second Race at Long Odds

Special to the Sunday American.

Sheepshead Bay Race Track, June 17.—[illegible] Western [illegible] owners who have [illegible] this summer made a $10,000 clean up here this afternoon. This was done in the second race where [illegible] McDowell's Geranium won, after being backed from 4 to 1 down to 9 to 5.

The Westerners killed the ring on Geranium and the clean up was a mighty [illegible] and one the bookmakers will not soon forget.

Charley Rowe, Johnny Coleman, Kansas Price, Tom McDowell and other Westerners were in on the play and they sunk the gaff good and deep.

Coup Well Planned.

The coup was engineered very quietly and this is the reason for its success. The Westerners lined up about the big books and at a given signal began operations. Before the bookies realized what was going on they were all loaded to the brim with Geranium money.

The price on the McDowell filly dropped. Some of the bookmakers tried to lay off some of the money, but could find no one who was not loaded up.

While the wise people were getting down their [illegible] the [illegible] was [illegible] who was touted all over the track. Hildebrand had the leg up on Canteen and [illegible] the [illegible] horse was said to be a "Moral." But like a good many other horses backed by people who are not in the secrets of race tracks, Canteen failed miserably. With [illegible] up, Geranium, was [illegible] from [illegible] at 12 to 1 with Uncle [illegible] at 3 to 1 third.

IN FINAL GAME TIGERS PROVE EASY FOR YALE

Special to the Sunday American.

New York, June 17.—[illegible] cheered [illegible], Yale's baseball [illegible] Princeton [illegible] in the third and [illegible] The score was 8 to [illegible]

The grand stands were [illegible] and black of the Tiger college were everywhere. The color scheme that was beautiful in the variegated hues was caused by the gowns of the fair friends of the collegians who made up a large part of the crowd and were dressed in the latest style dresses and hats.

Betting [illegible] the game began to get brisk [illegible] afternoon. The wagering was done at even money and a lot of gold was placed in stakeholders' hands.

While the contest was a slow one, it was interesting all the way through, and the victory of the Elis was brought about by good hitting and superior work in the field. Jackson proved to be too much for the New Jersey collegians, as up to the seventh inning they only managed to make one clean hit. In all they only made four hits off Jackson's puzzling delivery, while the Yale men made eleven off Byram and Doyle.

Byram was taken out of the box after the second inning for the simple reason that the New Haven men were hitting him rather freely and to good advantage. In the two innings during which he pitched eight hits were made off Byram, and during the remainder of the game Doyle held the Yale players to three hits in the last seven innings.

TYRO BEATS RIVALS IN BOSTON Y. C. REGATTA.

Strong Wind and Smooth Sea for the Boats Off Hull—Bat, Josephine, Vera II., Zaza II. and Tama the Other Winners

Hull, June 17.—With ideal racing conditions, a strong southwest wind and practically [illegible] sea, the Boston Yacht Club held [illegible] open race of the season off Hull today.

[illegible] the preparatory signal was [illegible] judges' boat, which was anchored off the clubhouse, the yachtsmen were making all the necessary preparations for the event, and the bay presented a very pretty sight with the boats manoeuvring in and about.

At 10 29 the preparatory gun was fired, and one minute later came a warning toot from the horn. At 10 35 came the signal for the start of the twenty two-footers. The course consisted of a reach to Peddocks, a reach to Quincy Great Hill, a run to Strawberry Hill and a reach to the finish line, a beat to Sheeps Island, another run to Strawberry Hill and back to the finish.

Old Clotho Takes the Lead.

The [illegible] now known as the Chee[illegible] got the start, with the Clorinda [illegible] Medric I. and II. [illegible] Rube being last.

[illegible] Peddocks the Medric II. [illegible] the mark first, [illegible] Medric I. [illegible] Nutmeg. Here the boats split tacks and made for the mark off Quincy Great Hill. Rounding this mark they all broke out spinnakers and started on the run for Strawberry Hill, the Nutmeg taking the lead and holding it as far as Bumkin Island, where she was passed by the Tyro. The boats kept in the same order, but [illegible] sailing all the way to Sheep [illegible] mark they again [illegible] and ran for Strawberry [illegible] which had [illegible] start, ran up [illegible] position.

Tyro the Winner.

Rounding this mark the boats made a dash for the finish, the Tyro holding the lead and crossing the line a winner, Rube second, Medric II. third. The Nutmeg, after sailing the course, did not finish, but sailed up behind the judges. It was afterwards learned that she did not start.

In the eighteen-foot class the Mirage II. got the start, followed by the Bat, Dorchen third, Hayseed and Bonitwo in order. These boats went over the same course as the twenty twos. On the reach to Peddocks, the Dorchen overhauled the Mirage and Bat and rounded the mark first, followed by the Mirage and Bat. On the run from Sheep Island to Strawberry Hill the Bat took the lead and held it to the finish. The Bonitwo was second and the Mirage third.

DORCHESTER HIGH WON GAME FROM MECHANICS.

Dorchester High won another championship by defeating Mechanic Arts High on Dunbar avenue field this morning by a score of 10 to 0. Great interest was centred in this game, as both teams were tied for first place and each wanted the game. Dorchester sent its old standby White, into the box, while the Somerville boys staked their hopes in Hall, who has led them to victory many times this season.

This time, however, Hall could not deliver the goods and was touched up for sixteen hits with a total of twenty-seven. Besides hitting the ball in a clean, sharp manner the Dorchester boys again demonstrated that taking chances on the bases often leads to good results, and kept Kelley throwing to second until his arm almost gave out. Ross led in this respect, stealing three bases, Hayes followed, with two to his credit and Clapp and Regnier one each.

White struck out seven of the Mechanic Arts boys and with the score 10 to 0 in the seventh he retired in favor of Clary who followed up the good work and struck out five in the remaining two innings.

Fish Played Well.

The catching of Joe Fish for Dorchester was a treat and his throwing to second was the best ever seen on this field, he catching no less than nine of the Somerville boys when they attempted to steal second. Rose is deserving of great praise for the manner in which he takes care of short and it must indeed be a swift one that he cannot get.

Clapp played his usual strong game and hit the ball in great style. After the game the boys held a meeting and elected A. Hibbard their captain of next year, he receiving every vote on the team.

Team Goes to Theatre.

On invitation of the management the team will sit down to a banquet on Monday night and will attend the Tremont Theatre as guest of Coach Woodcock.

The Dorchester boys are a happy lot of fellows because of the fact of having gone through two leagues winning the championship of both and not losing a single game during the entire season. The score:

WILTON A. A. 12, St. ANN'S 11.

Wilton A. A. defeated St. Ann's yesterday afternoon at Somerville by a score of 12 to 11. It was a hard fought contest from beginning to end.

HOLY CROSS AGAIN BEATS HARVARD ON THE DIAMOND.

Harvard fell a victim to the baseball prowess of the Holy Cross nine for the second time this year yesterday afternoon on Soldiers Field. At the beginning of the seventh inning the score stood 6 to 3 in Harvard's favor. After two bad innings at the beginning of the game, Paul Coburn had steadied down and had the Worcester batsmen at his mercy. Then, to save Coburn for the Yale game next Thursday the Harvard giant was taken out and Castle substituted.

In the next three innings five singles, a double and a home run netted Holy Cross six runs and the game. Harvard made a brave attempt to pull the game out of the fire after Holy Cross had taken the lead in the seventh by knocking four runs off Castle's delivery. Four hits in this inning, three singles and a four-sacker, with a passed ball did the work for Holy Cross.

Crimson in the Lead

In her half of the seventh, Harvard went after Holy Cross and scored two runs [illegible] the lead in her turn with a score of 8 to 7. Kernan opened up with a clean single and Leonard beat out a beautiful bunt. Randall sacrificed the runners along a base. Matthews put up a Texas Leaguer scoring Kernan. Stephenson grounded out to Dowd and Leonard scored on the play.

Neither side was able to get a run in the eighth, but in the ninth Holy Cross came strong and won out. Spring opened up with a single. Hoey put up a fly to Kemble. Reilly drove a pretty [illegible] over second. Carrigan raised a long fly to left, but the stellar Kernan was there and Harvard needed but one more out to win the game. Flynn, who had not been hitting, was equal to the task, however. He drove a terrific smash between left and centre that was good for two sacks, and which scored two runs, enough to put Holy Cross one to the good by a score of 9 to 8. Cahill ended the inning by fanning.

NEEDED HIT DIDN'T COME.

Harvard's best in the ninth was not quite good enough. Kernan led off again by singling. Leonard sacrificed him to second nicely, and then it was up to Randall or Matthews to save the day with a hit. Randall's strongest effort was a high fly over second which Dowd gobbled. Then came Matthews, the "pinch hitter." He swung hard, but the ball went straight to Barry, who tossed it to Flynn, and the game was over.

Had Coburn remained in the game there is but small doubt but that Harvard would have won. In six innings he allowed five hits, and had nine strike outs to his credit. Castle's work in the box was a distinct disappointment. He had no speed and small curves. The real weakness of the Harvard team was revealed in yesterday's game, the lack of a second strong pitcher.

The first inning of the Harvard exhibition in the first two innings was the best exhibition seen on Soldiers Field this year. On two hits, one dead ball and one base on balls, the Harvard men got six runs. In the first inning the Cambridge men made two successive double steals, both successful. Hugh Kernan played a magnificent game in left field with three as pretty catches as have been seen in local college balldom this year. Charlie Leonard batted well. His bunting was sure and successful and in the second he drove the ball over Cahill's head for a home run. Holy Cross hitting was very well divided. Among her nine players, everybody but Cahill getting at least one hit. The score:

HOLY CROSS. HARVARD.

VIC WILLIS WEAKENS IN SEVENTH, LETTING REDS AGAIN BEAT TENNEYITES

Hub Nationals Hold Kelley's Men Safe Till Their Pitcher Goes Up in the Air.

Special to the Sunday American.

Cincinnati, June 17.—The Bostons showed the Reds the way till the seventh when Willis weakened and the Reds forged to the front.

Walker passed both Dolan and Delehanty in the first [illegible] to Corcoran and Emslie called it a double play, although it looked as [illegible] the ball to first. [illegible] evened up, however, in the Reds' half when he called [illegible] out after [illegible]

[illegible] the Bostons a brace of tallies in the second. By a running [illegible] Tenney [illegible] Wolverton's out put him on third whence he scored on Needham's slash past Bridwell. Needham stole second and Raymer scored him with a single to centre. Raymer was caught between bases on the play and retired. Willis also singled but Abby was the third out.

Dolan Helped Out Reds.

Odwell [illegible] with two out in the Reds' half and Bridwell walked, but Schlei struck out. Walker was passed in the third and Barry [illegible] Here "Cozy" Dolan helped [illegible] by [illegible] Kelley's [illegible] Walker [illegible] Kelley [illegible] second. Seymour [illegible] Raymer intercepted it on the fly and passed the ball to Abby for a double play. Abby singled to left in the fifth, but two were out, and Schlei spoiled his try to steal second.

The sixth was Seymour's inning. After Dolan had [illegible] Delehanty made one of his [illegible] drives" past Kelley for three bases. [illegible] smashed [illegible] to centre which Seymour [illegible] to Schlei [illegible] Delehanty at the plate [illegible] for Walch [illegible]

In the Reds' half Barry opened with a long swat which went past Dolan. Kelley's hot drive went [illegible] to Wolverton, and Seymour sent a stinging drive to Tenney. Odwell was the third out on a [illegible] Raymer and Willis was [illegible] for [illegible] work.

With two out [illegible] Clarke went in to bat for Phillippe and made a double, scoring Ritchey with the tieing run. In the tenth [illegible] and scored on Wagner's fly to the outfield. Phillippe and Corridon had a battle of [illegible] each allowing the same number of hits. Philadelphia got their first run on an error by Leach. St. Louis, Mo., June 17.—New York took another game from St. Louis this afternoon, the score being 7 to 1. McFarland pitched for St. Louis, and New York hit him hard enough in the first four innings to get six runs. St. Louis was shut out in the meantime, and it was not until Mathewson let down in the fifth, that the home team finally scored. The extreme heat affected Mathewson, and he gave way to Wiltse in the seventh inning, with the latter finished out in good shape. New York's heavy hitting, and a home run by Brain, in the sixth inning, were the features. Attendance, 6,000. Score:

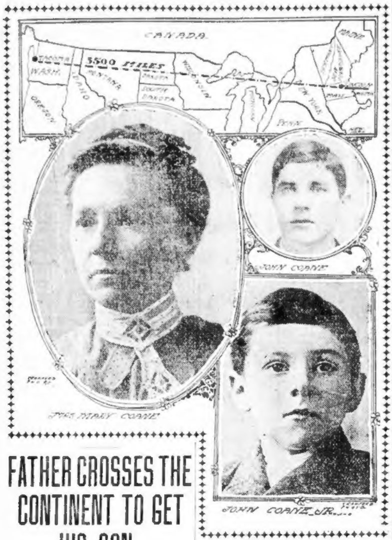
3,500 MILE CHASE FOR BOY KIDNAPPED BY MOTHER



Figures in 3,500-Mile Chase for Lincoln Boy and Route Father Has Taken to Recover Son Spirited Away by Mother.

FATHER CROSSES THE CONTINENT TO GET HIS SON.

Lincoln, June 17.—Because she took with her their seven-year-old son, whom he loved with his whole heart, John Coane has followed his wife 3,500 miles to Tacoma. She disappeared mysteriously four weeks ago. Whether he has found her and the boy is yet unknown at his home.

The sudden disappearance of Mrs. Coane caused a sensation in this town. At the same time that she went away a man who called at her home and was supposed to be her brother disappeared. It is presumed that her leaving was the result of this visit.

Mrs. Coane packed two trunks and had them taken to Waltham, stating to her husband that they contained effects of a friend. On Friday, May 19, Mrs. Coane performed her routine duties in the forenoon, her husband going to work on the farm. When he returned at noon she and her seven-year-old son, John, were missing. They had been driven by a neighbor to Waltham, a distance of five miles, and then they had taken the train for Boston, where all trace of them ends.

Consults State Police.

The husband returning home in the afternoon was thunder struck to discover that his wife had left, and was not convinced she had really gone until three days had passed and he received no word from her.

Coane worried greatly over the loss of his son. He consulted his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Coane, who reside in another section of the town, and they advised him to consult the State police. That morning he left his pretty little cottage, telling Mrs. Kearns, wife of a helper, that he was going to Boston, but would return about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. He went to Boston and not a word has been received of his whereabouts until a dispatch was received by the BOSTON AMERICAN that he was in Tacoma and had asked the police to aid him in locating his child.

John Coane was the foreman for the past four years on the country site of the Rev. James DeNormandie, pastor of the First Church of Roxbury. He is thirty years of age and was married to Mary Craig some eight years ago in Boston.

Two weeks before Mrs. Coane disappeared, a man about forty years of age appeared at the Coane house and stopped a few days, Mrs. Coane declaring to her husband that the visitor was her brother. Mrs. Coane was reticent, keeping her affairs secret even from her husband, and the parents of the man are inclined to think that Mrs. Coane's departure was the result of the visit of this man.

Sister Surprised.

Miss Molly Coane, sister of John Coane, when seen at her home, was greatly surprised to learn that her brother was in Tacoma.

"John never told us that he contemplated going away on a journey, but did say he would go as far as Boston to consult the State authorities in locating his wife and child, said Miss Coane.

"I would not be surprised if she were right here in this State or close to it. They apeared to live very happily and contented. It's all very strange and we do not understand it, least of all, John chasing across the country without telling us he was going."

Both He and Doherty After Cauley's Place Make Contest in Charlestown One of the Hottest in the Campaign

He wants the place that is now held by Alderman Edward L. Cauley.

There is another contestant for Alderman's Cauley's seat in the person of Representative Francis J. Doherty.

It is the opinion of the politicians that the contest for the aldermanic seat from Charlestown will be one of the warmest of the municipal campaign.

Dolan's Reason for Contest.

"Two years ago, after having served two years as president of the Common Council, it was my desire to make a change. I was finally prevailed upon by Mayor Collins and the organization to return to the Council.

"While this matter was pending Alderman Cauley expressed a desire to go to the Board. It was represented to him that I might wish to be a candidate in 1904, and that if I returned to the Council in 1903 and he went to the Board, he would probably be unwilling to stand aside. To this he made answer that he would not stand in my way, that all he wanted was 'one chance.'

"In 1904 I was again prevailed upon to return to the Council, and Mr. Cauley ran for the Board and was elected. He now asks for a third chance.

"For five years I have been supporting Ward 3 candidates for district office. For the past three years a majority of voters in my ward have voted for a Ward 8 candidate for either the Senate or the Board.

Cauley Has His Doubts.

"Ward 5 has not had an Alderman since the days of P. J. Donovan. We have had but a one-year Senator since the late Hon. John Dee held that office. I have been sacrificing myself and, to a certain extent, my ward, and it is time that we received some representation.

"I notified Mr. Cauley personally last September, in the presence of five of his friends, that I would be a candidate this Fall."

In answer to this declaration Alderman Cauley says that he has his doubts about either Dolan or Doherty being in the field.

"The people of Charlestown District," said he, "will hardly break away from custom to advance either of them at my expense, and I do not believe the Democratic organization will be a party to such proceeding."

SOME DAY THIS WEEK

OR NEXT week at the very latest the BOSTON AMERICAN'S Great Co-operative Encyclopedia Club will positively close. Unless you mail the coupon at once--NOW--you will miss this grand opportunity. Only those who act quickly will be in time to receive the benefit of this wonderful enterprise.

If you need an Encyclopedia, either for yourself or for your family, now is the time to get it. Thousands of homes which never before knew what it was to have a good reference work are now enjoying "THE NEW STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA." They profited by the AMERICAN'S Great Co-operative Enterprise. You can do the same. Will you grasp the opportunity before it is too late?

Do You Need an Encyclopedia?

The object of this enterprise is to place Encyclopedias in the homes of earnest men and women who desire to improve their condition. A good Encyclopedia is a whole library in itself. It gives in condensed and convenient form the collected wisdom of all time. Here you will find information on every subject—history, science, geography, politics, religion, commerce, trades, philosophy, etc.—written in words that all can understand. For the children, it will answer every question that pops into their inquiring minds; for older people, it will be a complete university, from which they can with a little application get the equivalent of a college education.

Do You Believe in CO-OPERATION?

Heretofore the best Encyclopedias have been put on the market at abnormally high figures, ranging from $80 to $120—prices which only the very rich could afford to pay. In order to overcome this obstacle arrangements were made with the publishers of the New Standard Encyclopedia (in 12 volumes) for several thousand complete sets, the last of which we are now distributing among our readers and friends. The American's object in entering upon this great enterprise is purely educational—to show what a great saving can be effected by co-operation. Those who join this Club receive their sets direct from the binders—no middleman makes a profit. As a result the Encyclopedia is supplied to the public at the lowest wholesale price, and on terms within the reach of every income.

THE NEW STANDARD ENCYCLOPEDIA.

NEWEST AND BEST REFERENCE LIBRARY ON THE MARKET.

After looking over the field carefully for an encyclopedia that would be suitable for our purpose, the NEW STANDARD was selected, because, in the judgment of many eminent critics and scholars, it is the best and most practical reference work that has yet been published. It is not one of those cheap, trashy affairs, rehashed from foreign sources, but a First-Class American Encyclopedia, written in a simple, clear and readable style.

FOR THE HOME.

Heretofore all Encyclopedias have been designed especially for the learned scholar or professional man who desires technical information. The New Standard is entirely different in this respect. Its articles are not technical, dry or hard to read, and, while they contain all the facts, everything is presented in such a clear, interesting manner that they invite further reading. In this Encyclopedia all minute details and weighty opinions are eliminated—it gives the facts, and the facts only, in the most readable, entertaining fashion. Every member of the family will read and enjoy it.

The New Standard Encyclopedia contains full and complete information on every subject of human interest. 900,000 topics are included, and yet so carefully has the work been edited that it is all contained in 12 massive volumes. This is the most convenient form for an Encyclopedia; it will be used where larger and more technical works would lie untouched on the shelves. The 12 volumes contain over 55,000 articles, which are equivalent to 100,000 volumes, boiled down and condensed. There are in all 8,500 pages and more than 8,000 illustrations, besides 150 double page maps, colored plates, etc.

How to Get a Set—It is impossible in this limited space to describe fully the plans and purposes of the Club, whereby members may have the entire library delivered to them at once, and pay for it at the rate of a few cents a day. If you are interested, write to-day for full particulars. Remember, it will not cost you a cent to investigate. This Club was organized for your benefit. No one will be to blame but yourself if you do not get one of these Encyclopedias. Tear off the coupon and mail it to us to-day. Only a few sets are left. The Club is now closing.

Specimen Pages From the Encyclopedia — FREE

If you have no Encyclopedia at all, or if you have one that is old and unsatisfactory, mail the attached coupon, which is not an application for membership, but simply a request for information, and you will receive, free of charge, a beautiful booklet containing full page duogravure portraits of the Mikado of Japan and the Emperor of Russia, double page map of Japan and Corea and the new Republic of Panama, besides many beautiful colored plates, sample pages, showing the text, etc. With the booklet we will send full particulars about the club. Remember, there is only one New Standard Encyclopedia. It is published by the University Society of New York, and the introductory sale is conducted solely by the Boston American Club.
